Russian Federation: European summer human rights bus tour

A brightly decorated bus -- bearing the name of Amnesty International and Swiss registration plates -- is travelling around Europe this summer offering people the chance to be informed about human rights abuses in the Russian Federation.

Amnesty International Switzerland launched the 100-day tour of a number of Central and East European countries in July as part of the human rights' organization's worldwide year-long campaign on human rights in the Russian Federation. Members of Amnesty International will use the tour stops to raise the organization's main concerns on human rights abuses in the Russian federation, many of which are committed with impunity.

An exhibition as well as videos produced by Amnesty International provide information about torture and ill-treatment in custody; violence against women; discrimination on ethnic grounds; unlawful killings and 'disappearances' in the Chechen Republic. People in different European cities will have the chance to sign a petition urging President Vladimir Putin to take action for hundreds of thousands of former Soviet citizens in Russia who are being denied their legal right to obtain Russian citizenship and/or permanent residency rights. When former Soviet passports expire on 31 December 2003, these people will be left stateless and may face the threat of deportation.

"We will continue to explain to everybody at each of our stops the aims of our campaign on human rights in the Russian Federation 'Justice for All'. Human rights abuses in the Russian Federation have affected thousands of people. We will continue to collect as many signatures as possible to highlight the need to improve the human rights situation," Daniel Bolomey, Secretary General of Amnesty International Switzerland said.
