EQUATORIAL GUINEA/ NIGERIA	Florencio Ela Bibang (m) ] Felipe Esono Ntumu (m) ] Equatorial Guinea nationals Antimo Edú (m) ]
New name:	Juan Ondo Abaga (m) ]

Florencio Elá Bibang, Felipe Esono Ntumu and Juan Ondo Abaga were tried in absentia by a military court in the city of Bata in Equatorial Guinea between 6 and 19 September. They were sentenced to 30 years in prison for their alleged involvement in an attempted coup on 8 October 2004. It appears that Antimo Edú was not tried. The whereabouts of the four men are unconfirmed, and Amnesty International fears for their safety.

Florencio Elá Bibang, a former Lieutenant-Colonel, Felipe Esono Ntumu and Juan Ondo Abaga were part of a group of 70 military officers, former military officers and the relatives of the alleged coup leader, charged with crimes including undermining the security of the state; rebellion; treason and negligence; and attempting to overthrow the government. The prosecution had asked for the three men, and three others, to be sentenced to death, but the court did not impose the death penalty.

Florencio Elá Bibang, Felipe Esono Ntumu and Antimo Edú were reportedly arrested by the Nigerian authorities in April. They were apparently travelling to Benin in order to seek asylum there. According to reports, on 3 July the men were abducted from detention at the Army Intelligence Authority in Lagos, Nigeria, by members of the Equatorial Guinea security services, and taken to Malabo, the capital of Equatorial Guinea. Juan Ondo Abanga was reportedly abducted from Benin by Equatorial Guinea security services personnel.

On 20 September, Equatorial Guinea national radio reported that Florencio Elá Bibang, Felipe Esono Ntumu and Juan Ondo Abaga were not in the country. However, Amnesty International has received information that all four men have been held incommunicado in Black Beach prison in Malabo since being abducted.

According to new information, Florencio Elá Bibang has Hepatitis C, rather than Hepatitis A as previously stated. He may not be receiving the medical treatment that he requires.
