- Mahamadou Issoufou, former president of the National Assembly, leader of the Parti nigérien pour la démocratie et le socialisme (PNDS)

Amnesty International has learned that all but one of the detainees arrested on or around 11 February 1997 were released without charge on 23 January 1997.

There were no reports of ill-treatment. One member of the CDS, Mahamadou Lamine Yamien, remains in detention at the headquarters of the Renseignements généraux (General Intelligence) in the capital, Niamey. He has not been charged or brought before a court, but has reportedly been allowed visits by members of his family and the CDS.

One other political leader, Sala Habi, a former member of parliament, whose arrest was announced on 25 January 1997, also remains in detention without charge or trial. He was arrested in Tahoua (400 kilometres north-east of Niamey) and transferred to the premises of the Police judiciaire (Criminal Investigation Department) in the capital, where he has been allowed visits.

A rally organized by the opposition on 25 January 1997 passed off peacefully and there were no reports of political unrest on 27 January 1997, the first anniversary of the coup which brought President Maïnassara to power.
