Dozens of East Timorese youths were detained by police during a peaceful pro-independence demonstration in Jakarta on 19 November. According to the police, they have been have been charged with expressing "feelings of hostility, hatred or contempt toward the Indonesian Government" under Articles 154 and 155 of the Criminal Code. In contravention of the Indonesian Code of Criminal Procedure (KUHAP), Police authorities have refused the prisoners access to lawyers and relatives until they have finished interrogating them. Amnesty International is concerned that this increases the risk that they may be subjected to ill-treatment or torture.

Amnesty International believes that some or all of those detained may be prisoners of conscience. It is calling on the Indonesian authorities to release immediately and unconditionally anyone held solely for their political activities or beliefs and, in the interim, to grant immediate access to lawyers and relatives to those in detention.

The demonstrators went first to the office of the United Nations Information Office on Jalan Thamrin. Unable to enter the premises to present a statement addressed to the UN Secretary General, they instead read it aloud outside the gate. With banners and signs calling for a referendum on East Timor's political future and for inquiries into the 12 November massacre at Santa Cruz Cemetery, Dili, they proceeded to the Embassies of Japan and Australia nearby. As they regrouped near the Hotel Indonesia, members of the riot police (SABHARA) moved in to disperse them and journalists were ordered to leave the vicinity. The demonstrators began to flee, but were chased by police who beat them with truncheons and loaded them onto three waiting vehicles. Two foreign journalists at the scene were taken aside by security forces and questioned about their links to the demonstrators before being released.

Military authorities initially denied that any demonstrators had been detained, but independent sources said that at least 35 people, and possibly as many as 70, had been held at the Metropolitan Jakarta Police Station. Amnesty International has so far learned the names of 13 (listed above) said to have been held. A team of four human rights advocates and lawyers who tried to visit the detainees at the Metropolitan Jakarta Police Station on 22 November, were told by police authorities that they could not do so until the police had finished interrogating the suspects. The police told them that some of the detainees might be released within a few days, and that they might be permitted to visit those still in custody on Monday 25 November, six days after the detainees were arrested.

BACKGROUND INFORMATION

About 100 people were killed and scores were wounded when Indonesian security forces opened fire for several minutes on a group of mourners at Santa Cruz cemetery in Dili, East Timor on 12 November 1991. Dozens of others were badly beaten during the incident. The victims, many of them school students and other young people, were among an estimated 3,000 people who had gone to the grave of Sebastiao (Gomes) Rangel, a young man killed on 28 October when Indonesian troops entered the parish church of Motael, Dili, where he and about 20 other political activists had been hiding. At least 42 people, and possibly as many as 300, have subsequently been detained, and some have reportedly been tortured and killed in police and military custody. According to one report, between 60 and 80 detainees, including witnesses of the Santa Cruz massacre, were taken from various prisons in Dili on 15 November, driven to a spot several miles outside the town, shot and buried in unmarked graves.

These events are only the most recent in a pattern of serious human rights violations by Indonesian security forces in East Timor since they invaded the former Portuguese colony in 1975. A pattern of short-term detention, ill-treatment and torture of political detainees in East Timor has worsened in the last year. More than 400 people have been detained since late 1988 for their alleged involvement in pro-independence political activities; at least 200 of them since early 1990. Many may be or may have been prisoners of conscience and many have reportedly been ill-treated or tortured in custody. At least 30 people, and possibly many more, were killed by Indonesian security forces in 1990 and early 1991 in apparent extrajudicial executions, and there are hundreds of unresolved cases of "disappearance".

RECOMMENDED ACTION: Telegrams/telexes/faxes/express and airmail letters:

- expressing concern that at least 35 and possibly as many 70 East Timorese youths were held in incommunicado detention in Jakarta after being arrested at a peaceful demonstration;
- expressing concern at police statements that the detainees could not be seen by lawyers until the police had finished interrogating them;
- urging the authorities to ensure that the detainees are treated humanely while in detention and allowed proper access to relatives and lawyers;
- stating that the detainees appear to be being held in violation of their right to express non-violent political views, and that the charges against them appear to be in violation of international human rights law;
- calling on the government to release all those detained solely for the peaceful expression of their political views or activities.
