

VIET NAM RELEASE PRISONERS OF CONSCIENCE

Amnesty International is calling for all prisoners of conscience to be included in a major amnesty for prisoners, authorized by Viet Nam's President to mark National Day on 2 September 2010. The Ministry of Public Security has said that between 25,000 to 30,000 prisoners will be granted amnesty and released from prison before National Day.

Prisoner amnesties take place two or three times a year in Viet Nam, usually on the occasion of Lunar New Year (dates vary), Liberation Day (30 April) and National Day. Prisoners considered to be a threat to national security are normally excluded. As most prisoners of conscience have been sentenced under provisions of the national security section of the Penal Code, it appears unlikely that they will be considered for release. However, prisoners of conscience have been included under earlier amnesties. In 1998, at least 13 prisoners of conscience were released under two amnesties for more than 7,500 prisoners, and others have been released since then.

Dozens of prisoners of conscience in Viet Nam have been convicted and sentenced after unfair trials in recent years. Most have been charged under Article 88 (Conducting propaganda against the Socialist Republic of Viet Nam) or Article 79 (Carrying out activities aimed at overthrowing the people's administration) of the 1999 Penal Code. The reasons behind their imprisonment include activities such as supporting political groups not recognized by the state; criticizing government policies; calling for democracy and human rights; taking part in peaceful public protests; posting pieces which are critical of the government on the internet; giving interviews to foreign journalists; publishing dissident journals; and providing legal advice for other dissidents on trial.

They include independent trade unionists Tran Quoc Hien and Doan Van Dien; human rights lawyer Nguyen Van Dai (photo left); and Truong Quoc Huy mobile phone technician. Catholic priest Father Nguyen Van Ly, who is serving an eight year sentence, was temporarily released on 15 March 2010 for 12 months so that he could obtain medical treatment following a stroke he had in prison in November 2009. He remains under surveillance and restriction, and is at risk of return to prison at any time. Nguyen Binh Thanh and Nguyen Phong, tried in the same case, are serving five and six year prison sentences respectively. Buddhist monk Thich Quang Do, the head of the banned Unified Buddhist Church of Viet Nam (UBCV), has been under indefinite house arrest at the Thanh Minh Zen monastery in Ho Chi Minh City since 2003. Human rights lawyer Le Thi Cong Nhan, is currently detained under three years' house arrest, after completing a three year prison sentence in March 2010.

Amnesty International is calling on the Vietnamese authorities to take this opportunity to release all prisoners of conscience immediately and unconditionally for the National Day amnesty of 2010. At the same time, the authorities should make a commitment to repeal or amend vaguely worded legislation which criminalizes peaceful dissent, and to end the harassment and imprisonment of individuals for exercising their rights to freedom of expression, association and opinion.
