

AMNESTY INTERNATIONAL MEDIA ADVISORY

AI Index: AFR 37/008/2013
22 November 2013

Mali elections: Restoring the rule of law after two years of crisis

Following two years of extrajudicial killings, forced disappearances, and sexual violence, the first round of legislative elections is due to take place on 24 November.

Amnesty International has extensively documented human rights abuses committed during the last two years and has experts available for comment.

"Legislative elections will be an important step in restoring people's confidence in the Malian authorities," said Gaëtan Mootoo, Amnesty International's Mali researcher. "But to show they really mean business, the authorities need to investigate and prosecute the perpetrators of unlawful killings, forced disappearances, torture and sexual abuse."

The first round of legislative elections, follow peaceful presidential elections in July and August earlier this year. The second round will take place on 15 December.

Amnesty International is publishing a Human Rights Agenda on 30 November to coincide with a visit to the country by its Secretary General, Salil Shetty. The Agenda is calling for an end to human rights abuses by all parties of the conflict and for thorough and independent investigations.

ENDS

Amnesty International reports and press releases on the crisis in Mali can be found here.

For interviews with Amnesty International's Mali researchers please contact Louise Orton on +44 (0) 7961 421583 or +44(0)778472126 or email louise.orton@amnesty.org

Louise Orton

Africa Press Officer

Media Programme, Amnesty International – International Secretariat

Tel: + 44 (0) 207 413 5729

Mobile: + 44 (0) 7961 421583

Out of hours Press Mobile (7pm GMT – 9am GMT and weekends) +44 (0) 777 847 2126

www.amnesty.org