Theme: "disappearance" / reported detention / physician

Summary

Since it was confirmed in June 1999 that Dr Flora Brovina was being detained in Poñarevac prison in eastern Serbia, Amnesty International has had confirmation that her family and lawyer have been able to make regular visits to her. However, there is continuing concern about her health and the nature of the judicial process. The most recent news is that she will be brought to trial next week.

Her family and defence lawyer have reportedly been denied the right to speak in private with her during recent visits. Family members also complain that they have had to speak at a distance of several metres and have been forbidden conversation in their native Albanian and have had to use Serbian, apparently so that the guards can monitor the conversations.

Flora Brovina has been seen by a doctor and is receiving some medication and has been given warmer clothes. However, she is reported to be suffering from angina and concern for her health remains.

She is expected to be brought to trial on 11 November 1999. Amnesty International fears that she may not receive a fair trial. For example, her right to prepare an adequate defence may have been violated as she has reportedly not been able to communicate with defence counsel in private.

Background

Dr Flora Brovina, a 48-year-old ethnic Albanian paediatrician from Kosovo province, "disappeared" on the afternoon of 20 April 1999 - initially reported as 22 April 1999 - after reportedly having been forcefully abducted from her home by a group of about eight men.

On 17 May 1999 the district court in Priština, Kosovo province, opened an investigation into her case. The court stated that Dr Brovina was accused of "association for the purpose of hostile activity under article 136 paragraph 1, damaging the territorial integrity of the FRY article 116 paragraph 1", and of "terrorism under article 136 paragraph 1 of the Federal Criminal Code".

According to the documents of 17 May, Dr Brovina is accused of organizing, in her capacity as the president of the Lidhje e Gruas Shqiptare, League of Albanian Women, the provision of food, clothing, medical supplies and medical treatment to members of the Kosovo Liberation Army (KLA), and of being present at meetings held at the premises of the League of Albanian Women. Allegedly, "terrorist actions" were planned at these meetings.

Although Dr Brovina has been reported as "sympathising with" the KLA (Washington Post, 10 July 1999), she has denied any involvement with the organization. Amnesty International is not aware of any statements she has made advocating the use of violence, or of any evidence of her involvement in violent acts.

Recommended Actions
