

UA 282/99

Preventive Death Penalty Action

26 October 1999

SAUDI ARABIA

Since the beginning of this year 96 people have been put to death in Saudi Arabia. The latest person to be executed was Orlando Lorenzo on 25 October 1999 in Riyadh.

Orlando Lorenzo, a Filipino national, was one of 59 people whose cases were highlighted by Amnesty International in a letter the organization sent to the Saudi Arabian government in September this year. No response has been received to date. As scheduled executions are not announced in advance, and in view of the alarming recent increase in executions Amnesty International fears that some or all of these people may be at risk of imminent execution. (See UA 251/99 - AI Index MDE 23/08/99, 27 September 1999).

Amnesty International is particularly concerned that these people may be at risk of execution after trials which do not comply with internationally recognised standards for fair trial, such as Article 14 of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights (ICCPR), and resolution 1984/50 adopted by the Economic and Social Council, on the Safeguards guaranteeing the protection of those facing the death penalty. Although Saudi Arabia acceded to the UN Convention Against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman and Degrading Treatment or Punishment in 1997, confessions obtained under duress, torture or by deception are sometimes admitted in court.

Background

Saudi Arabia imposes the death penalty for drug trafficking, murder, rape, armed robbery and apostasy (turning away from Islam). Of the 96 people put to death this year, 50 were foreign nationals, including 12 Pakistanis, 10 Nigerians (three of them women), nine Afghans, six Indians, as well as nationals of Thailand, Indonesia, the Philippines, Syria, Jordan, Ethiopia, Chad and Yemen.

RECOMMENDED ACTION: Please send telegrams/faxes/express/airmail letters in English or your own language:

- calling for an immediate halt to all executions and the commutation of all outstanding death sentences;
- expressing dismay at the increased use of the death penalty in Saudi Arabia in recent months;
- expressing concern that executions are carried out after trials that fall short of international standards, and urging the authorities to follow international standards for capital trials.
