GEORGIA Reports of torture and at least 10 further deaths (no names known)

Fears for the safety of ethnic Georgians in the disputed region of Abkhazia continue after reports that at least 10 people were killed and dozens of others were tortured or ill-treated when Abkhazian militia swept through the Gali district from 11 to 16 March 1995.

A spokesman for the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees reported that UN doctors had seen at least 10 bodies, most of which bore signs of torture, including pulled fingernails, bad burns and wounds apparently caused by red-hot bayonets and knives. UN doctors had also treated at least 35 people who had suffered similar types of torture, or had been severely beaten. Local residents reported finding at least another six bodies and an undetermined number of people were said to be missing.

The attacks were carried out as some 400 to 600 militiamen took part in what was described by Abkhazian authorities as an operation to register Georgian refugees and locate "partisans" who had infiltrated the territory with them.

Hundreds of thousands of Georgians are estimated to have been displaced from Abkhazia during bitter fighting over the disputed region. Small numbers have returned, mostly to the Gali district, amid reports that some have suffered reprisals after attacks on Abkhazian forces. In late January, for example, three members of one family were said to have been extrajudicially executed by Abkhazian militia after several of their men were killed by unknown assailants.

FURTHER RECOMMENDED ACTION: Please send telegrams/faxes/express and airmail letters in English, Russian or your own language:

- urging an immediate, comprehensive and impartial investigation into the reports of killings, torture and other ill-treatment;
- urging that the results of such an investigation be made public, with any perpetrators identified brought to justice within the norms of international law;
- urging that all appropriate steps are taken to ensure the security of all residents, regardless of ethnic origin.
