Scores of civilians suspected of supporting an armed opposition group have been arrested by police since the start of April, and are at grave risk of torture.

The detainees are accused of supporting the last armed opposition group still operating in the country, the National Liberation Forces (Forces Nationales de Libération, FNL), which resumed hostilities with government forces on 17 April. Many have been held without charge in excess of the legal maximum of 15 days.

The majority of detainees have been arrested in the western provinces of Bujumbura Mairie, Bujumbura Rural, Bubanza and Kayanza; others in the northern province of Ngozi and the south-western provinces of Makamba and Bururi. Many are being detained in small police detention facilities (cachots), which are severely overcrowded.

Seventeen detainees (15 of them named above) are being held in a cell measuring two metres square in a cachot in Ngozi. According to local human rights monitors, they are being denied family visits: this means they are going hungry, as detention centres provide no food to inmates. Police officers are apparently feeding their leftovers to the detainees. There is no latrine in the cell.

Local sources have stated that a number of those detained have been transferred to a camp run by the division of the army in charge of controlling the waters of Lake Tanganyika, called Camp Marine. The camp is in the commune of Kabezi, in the province of Bujumbura Rural, south of the capital, Bujumbura.

BACKGROUND INFORMATION

An estimated 300,000 people were killed in the armed conflict in Burundi that began in 1993. The FNL continued hostilities until 7 September 2006, when they signed a "Comprehensive Ceasefire Agreement" with the government. A committee overseeing peace negotiations, the Joint Verification Monitoring Mechanism, began work on 19 February 2007. The FNL delegation pulled out of talks in July 2007, but returned on 16 May 2008.

RECOMMENDED ACTION: Please send appeals to arrive as quickly as possible, in French, English or your own language:

- calling on the authorities to bring the detainees to trial promptly, before an independent and impartial court in proceedings which meet international standards of fairness;

- urging the authorities to ensure that all detainees are protected from torture or other ill-treatment, in accordance with international human rights law;
- calling on the authorities to ensure that all detainees have access to medical care and sanitary facilities;
- urging the authorities to ensure that all detainees have access to lawyers of their own choosing and family visits.
