CONVICTED BLOGGER APPEALS SENTENCE

Blogger Darya Poliudova was sentenced on 21 December 2015 to two years' imprisonment in an open prison colony for criticizing the Russian government. The appeal hearing will take place on 10 March.

Political activist and blogger Darya Poliudova was sentenced on 21 December 2015 by the Oktiabrskii District Court in Krasnodar, southern Russia, to two years' imprisonment in an open prison colony. She has already spent six months in pre-trial detention which will be counted against the sentence. The Court found that her posts on the Russian social media site VKontakte (VK) criticizing Russia's annexation of Crimea and the official policy towards Ukraine constituted "calls to commit extremist activities" and "calls to take action threatening the territorial integrity of the Russian Federation". The judge did not order her immediate detention but she remains under travel restrictions.

Darya Poliudova insists that she only exercised her right to freedom of expression and appealed the sentence. The appeal hearing will take place on 10 March at the Krasnodar Regional Court.

The charges against Darya Poliudova relate to her social media posts in which she peacefully expressed her views, including photos of herself carrying political banners with slogans such as "No war in Ukraine but a revolution in Russia". Under one photo of her protesting against the Russian government, she posted a message blaming President Vladimir Putin for "acts of terror and catastrophes in Russia" that had occurred during his time in office. The judge considered that some of her online posts and comments on Ukraine were evidence that she wanted "a violent overthrow of the constitutional order".
