IRAN: Political executions

Amnesty International has on previous occasions expressed its serious concern about reports of political executions taking place in Iran. Further confirmation that a wave of political executions has taken place in recent months emerged in a statement by Ayatollah Montazeri, Ayatollah Khomeini's designated successor, to the annual meeting of the Association of Muslim Students held earlier this month and reported in the British newspaper The Independent on 15 October 1988. In this statement Ayatollah Montazeri is reported to have said,

"People have complained to me that their relatives, while serving short prison sentences for political offences, have been executed without any explanation. This is not how our Islamic justice should operate."

Ayatollah Montazeri has often made public appeals for a fairer judicial system, and for the proper treatment of prisoners. One of the ideas he is particularly associated with is the granting of amnesties to political prisoners who are considered to be "repentant" of their former beliefs and activities. This idea has recently come under public criticism. It has been alleged that such repentant prisoners have returned to armed opposition to the government, and there have been calls for the policy of granting amnesties to be discontinued in favour of decisive action against political opponents. Some authorities, including Chief Justice Ayatollah Ardebili and former Director of Evin Prison, Assadollah Lajevardi, have apparently called for their summary execution. Ayatollah Montazeri's statement would appear to indicate opposition to the widespread execution of political opponents.

This month, Amnesty International has received reports of further political executions in Orumieh and Tabriz in north western Iran, and elsewhere. The ban on family visits to political prisoners is believed to be continuing, which makes specific information about the extent of the executions impossible to obtain. In the context of government statements and reports from a wide range of opposition sources indicating that political executions are continuing, Amnesty International is persuaded that there have been very substantial numbers of political executions in Iran in the last ten weeks.

Amnesty International is an independent worldwide movement working for the international protection of human rights. It seeks the release of men and women detained anywhere because of their beliefs, colour, sex, ethnic origin, language or religious creed, provided they have not used or advocated violence. These are termed prisoners of conscience. It works for fair and prompt trials for all political prisoners and works on behalf of such people detained without charge or trial. It opposes the death penalty and torture or other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment of all prisoners.
Amnesty International opposes the death penalty in all cases as a violation of the right to life and the right not to be subjected to cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment, as proclaimed in the Universal Declaration of Human Rights. In the case of Iran it is particularly concerned by the lack of provisions for a fair trial in political cases, and the lack of any procedure for prisoners sentenced to death to appeal against conviction or sentence.

- expressing deep regret at continuing reports that political executions have taken place; and asking for details of the procedures by which the death sentences were passed and approved. Please refer to any previous letters you have written in this connection;
