Deficiencies in the Liberian judicial system lead to prolonged pre-trial detention and impunity for sexual and gender-based violence

Human Rights Council adopts Universal Periodic Review outcome on Liberia

Amnesty International appreciates efforts by the Liberian authorities to uphold human rights despite challenges arising from the Ebola outbreak, including its engagement with the Universal Periodic Review.

However, despite policy reform and other positive initiatives, Amnesty International shares the concerns expressed by several States during the review, regarding shortcomings in the justice sector, including prolonged pre-trial detention, and poor conditions in detention.

Amnesty International urges Liberia to improve the conditions of detainees in all places of detention, in line with international standards, and to ensure access to gender-specific medical care, adequate food, hygiene and exercise. Liberia must ensure that pre-trial detention is used only as a measure of last resort, including by expanding the availability of mediation and other options to reduce pre-trial detention for minor offences.

As was highlighted by several States during the review, deficiencies in the judicial system has led to impunity for sexual and gender-based violence. Despite an increasing rate of violence against women and girls, only a few cases have been conclusively prosecuted. Amnesty International reiterates its call on Liberia to increase resources and improve coordination and cooperation within the justice system on cases of gender-based violence, including by creating a tracking system to monitor case progression.

As in the first UPR of Liberia, a number of States made recommendations that it ratify a range of international human rights instruments. In this regard,
