ZIMBABWE HUMAN RIGHTS DEFENDER OUT ON BAIL

Pastor Evan Mawarire, a human rights defender and leader of the #ThisFlag movement in Zimbabwe has been granted bail by the High Court. He is expected to stand trial for the charges against him. Amnesty International is concerned that Pastor Evan Mawarire's charges are an attempt to intimidate him and prevent his human rights work.

Evan Mawarire has been released after the High Court granted him bail on 8 February. He was brought to court for the first time on 3 February since his arrest on 1 February upon arrival at Harare International Airport. The magistrate presiding in his case denied his bail application and instead recommended that he apply for bail through the High Court. The magistrate had also recommended that he be placed in remand until 17 February when trial is supposed to begin.

According to his lawyer, nine members of the Central Intelligence Organisation at the airport arrested Evan, a pastor, human rights defender and leader of #ThisFlag movement, was initially charged under Section 22 of the Criminal Procedure Act, for 'subverting a constitutionally elected government'. The maximum sentence for this charge is 20 years in prison without the option of a fine. The police, on 2 February, added another charge of 'insulting the flag of Zimbabwe' under section 6 of the Flag of Zimbabwe Act.

#ThisFlag is an independent social media movement that staged a national stay-away in Zimbabwe on 6 July 2016 in protest against deteriorating socio-economic conditions. Evan was previously arrested on 12 July 2016 and charged with 'incitement of public violence' under Section 36 of the Criminal Law Act in relation to the national stay-away. The police had continued to look for him even after he was released last year, when charges against him were dropped. Evan fled to the USA in July 2016 for fear of his safety and recently decided to return back home.

Amnesty International believes that the charges against Evan are intended to obstruct his work as a human rights defender and adds to the growing trend by the state to harass and intimidate activists and human rights defenders.

Please write immediately in English or your own language:

- Urging the Zimbabwean authorities to drop all charges against Evan Mawarire, as he has been charged solely for the peaceful exercise of his rights as enshrined in the Zimbabwe constitution and regional and human rights law and standards;
- Calling on the Zimbabwean authorities to ensure the criminal justice system is not misused to target or harass human rights defenders;

ADDITIONAL INFORMATION

#ThisFlag is an independent social media movement that was founded by Evan Mawarire, a pastor and human rights defender based in Harare, Zimbabwe. In April 2016, he posted a video online expressing his frustration at the state of the nation. In June 2016, Mawarire invited disgruntled citizens to sign an online petition to force the Energy and Power Development Minister, Samuel Undenge, to step down over allegations of mishandling public funds through tender irregularities.

On 6 July 2016, through #ThisFlag, he successfully organised a national stay away with the majority of working Zimbabweans, in both the formal and informal sectors, around the country heeding his call to stay away from work in a bid to make the government respond to pleas for better governance. Evan called for people to stay away from work peacefully and to not engage in any violence. The stay-away was, however, marred by some acts of violence, especially in Bulawayo, where vehicles and some government property was destroyed. Demonstrators also burnt tires on the roads.

After the stay-away, Evan announced that he was asking Zimbabweans to heed his call for a further 2 day stay-away from Wednesday 13 July 2016 to Thursday 14 July 2016. Evan was arrested on 12 July 2016, a day before the second stay-away, when he presented himself to the police and was charged with 'incitement of public violence' under Section 36 of the Criminal Law Act in relation to the national stay-away. He appeared in court on Wednesday 13 July 2016, where his charge was changed whilst in court to 'subverting a constitutional government' under section 22 of the Criminal Codification Act. Evan was freed on the same day, after the magistrate found his arrest was unconstitutional and dismissed the charge against him.

At 7am on 14 July 2016, a group of unidentified men came to Evan Mawarire's house in an unmarked white pick-up truck looking for him. On the same day, Evan Mawarire's wife, Samantha, also saw a police vehicle with police officers in it passing close to their house twice. In both instances, the police officers immediately drove off when they saw her. Seven unidentified men in an unmarked vehicle came to his house looking for him the next day, on 15 July, and when his wife asked for their identification, they left. The seven men also went to his church to inquire about his whereabouts from his personal assistant. The same men went back to his church office on 20 July 2016 looking for him and, on 8 August 2016, they allegedly assaulted the caretaker at the church. Four unidentified women and a man visited Evan Mawarire's house inquiring about his whereabouts on 26 August 2016.

Evan had to leave his country of residence in July 2016 for fear of his safety. The police have been after him despite a Magistrates' Court dismissing the charge against him and ordering his release last year.
