On Thursday 9 February, Amnesty International is to publish a new report, Sudan: No end to the conflict in Darfur. The report highlights new evidence of recent arms supplies to Sudan being used to commit serious human violations in Darfur, despite a UN arms embargo remaining in place.

A wave of ethnically targeted attacks in eastern Darfur by Sudanese government forces and militias against the Zaghawa community saw an estimated 70,000 people displaced in 2011.

The report is published a few days before governments resume crucial negotiations at the UN in New York on a future arms trade treaty.
