Three other journalists

Journalist Jineth Bedoya was abducted and tortured by paramilitaries, who told her repeatedly of a lista negra, death list, of journalists they had sentenced to death, including her and four of her colleagues. People named on such death lists are frequently attacked in Colombia, and Amnesty International is concerned that those responsible may be planning a campaign of terror against other journalists.

On the evening of 24 May a man telephoned Jineth Bedoya claiming to represent imprisoned paramilitaries who wanted to meet with her. The following day she went to meet the man at the La Modelo prison in the capital, Bogotá. As she waited for an entry ticket a man approached her, who asked her who she was and then at gunpoint took her to a nearby house where she was gagged, bound, beaten, psychologically and physically tortured and physically ill-treated. The men beat her as they took her in a car to the outskirts of the city of Villavicencio, three hours' drive from Bogotá, and abandoned her there some 10 hours after she had been abducted.

As a legal affairs reporter for the newspaper El Espectador, Jineth Bedoya had covered a 27 April riot involving paramilitary prisoners at the La Modelo prison, in which some two dozen people were killed. Paramilitaries objected to her coverage of the gun battle, and sent death threats attached to copies of her articles to the offices of El Espectador.

BACKGROUND INFORMATION

Two hundred journalists have been assassinated in the Americas since 1988, 89 of them in Colombia, according to the Sociedad Interamericana de Prensa (SIP), Inter-American Press Society.

More than 30,000 civilians have died in the last 10 years, as the conflict between the Colombian armed forces and their paramilitary allies and left-wing armed opposition groups has intensified. In 1998 Andrés Pastrana's government began peace negotiations with the two major armed opposition groups, but the violence has continued to escalate.
