On 3 September, Galindo Alvarado Mendoza, a cousin of Otoniel de la Roca Mendoza, was shot and killed by two men in the town of Nueva Concepcion, Escuintla Department. He was killed in front of his 11-year-old niece. Amnesty International is concerned for her safety and that of other members of Galindo Alvarado Mendoza's family.

At approximately 2pm, Galindo Alvarado Mendoza was reportedly taking his niece home from school on his motorcycle, when two unidentified men also on a motorcycle pulled up beside him. They allegedly told him to stop as they wanted to talk to him. When he stopped, one of the men reportedly shot him six times directly in the head. The fact that nothing was stolen from Galindo Alvarado Mendoza or his niece, including visible jewellery and his wallet, suggests that the killing was not a common crime. After they had shot Galindo Alvarado Mendoza, the men then allegedly told his niece to go home. According to reports, Galindo Alvarado Mendoza's niece recognised one of the men as an ex-military commissioner whom the family knew by name.

It is thought that the killing of Galindo Alvarado Mendoza is related to an ongoing campaign of threats and harassment against Otoniel de la Roca Mendoza and his relatives. The mother of Galindo Alvarado Mendoza, who is also Otoniel de la Roca Mendoza's aunt, lives with other relatives in Nueva Concepcion. They first noticed that their house was under surveillance by unidentified individuals in 2002. One of those watching the house was reportedly known to them as an ex-military commissioner from the Escuintla area. However, this man was reportedly not the former military commissioner identified by Galindo Alvarado Mendoza's niece. At the same time as the house was under surveillance, unknown people were also said to be intermittently following Galindo Alvarado Mendoza. Two weeks before he was killed, Galindo Alvarado Mendoza had called Otoniel de la Roca to say that he was still being followed.

In the last week of March 2002, Galindo Alvarado Mendoza's mother reportedly received an anonymous telephone call at their home, in which the caller inquired about Otoniel de la Roca's whereabouts, saying that they wanted to be in touch with him and that they knew she was in contact with him. Galindo Alvarado Mendoza's mother said that she had no information about his whereabouts and could not contact him. The caller then said he would call again, and if she had no further information, "A ver que le va a pasar." (You will see what happens).

In May 2002, an unknown car stopped on a number of occasions in front of the house and its occupants were seen observing the house. The same military commissioner was also often seen near the house. In June or July 2002, Galindo Alvarado Mendoza's mother told Otoniel de la Roca that she had learnt that one of her sister's young children was being followed by unknown individuals. The family is not receiving any protection from the authorities at present.

Otoniel de la Roca Mendoza and his family have been the target of threats and intimidation both in Guatemala and in the USA, where de la Roca sought refuge in 1997. Otoniel de la Roca Mendoza is a key witness before the Inter-American Court in the case of the 1992 "disappearance" of guerrilla commander Efraim Bamaca Velasquez. There have been no new threats against Otoniel de la Roca Mendoza or his family since June 2003. Before he left Guatemala, he received anonymous telephone calls warning him that his relatives remaining in the country would bear the consequences of his actions.
