Beijing, June 1993.

Wang Junping, convicted of train robbery, stands in the centre of the photograph wearing a flat cap flanked by policemen. Wang Zudong and Shi Wushun charged with collaboration in the robberies stand on the right and far left respectively. Their hands are tied behind their backs to wooden posts. The posts and placards round their necks state their crime and name. The three men having been sentenced to death are being publicly paraded in Beijing before being taken to the execution ground to be shot.

An unknown execution ground in Beijing, June 1993.

Prisoners lying dead after the execution has been carried out. In the foreground, still wearing his flat cap, lies Wang Junping. The policemen who carried out the execution can be seen to the far left holding their rifles. Prisoners are usually shot in the back of the head, although from the photograph it is not clear if this was the method used in the case of Wang Junping and the other prisoners.

Police examine the corpses of a dozen people executed for drug trafficking in Yunnan province in late 1993. The names and crimes of the convicted are written on the cardboard signs. After the executions are carried out a red cross is struck through the writing. Victims are usually forced to kneel with their hands tied behind their backs, and are shot in the back of the head by a soldier or police officer.
