All were accused of belonging to a 16 member gang which allegedly committed a series of highway robberies stealing a total of 6.29 million Yuan. Fu Limin and eight others appealed against the original sentences which were passed in October. Eight of the appeals were rejected and Fu Limin was given a two year reprieve. Two other members of the gang were given sentences of between three and 20 years imprisonment. It was reported that the two main ringleaders, Chen Weixiang and Zhang Xiaojian appealed against the sentences given to the other alleged gang members, in particular the female members (who were accused of luring the victims). Unusually the provincial high court president acted as the chief judge in the appeal hearing. It was also reported that one of the executed females survived two bullets during the execution and pleaded to be shot dead - the third bullet killed her. It was reported that over 2,000 students and workers were 'invited' to attend the rally where Xu Liandong, president of Shenzhen Intermediate People's Court read out the verdicts in front of the 16 handcuffed members. He allegedly told the rally that "Today's condemnation has proved provincial authorities' sincerity in combatting highway crimes (and), maintaining peace in
