INDONESIA/EAST TIMOR: Group of mourners, Dili, East Timor

An estimated 20 people, and possibly many more, were reportedly killed and dozens were wounded when Indonesian security forces opened fire on a group of mourners at Santa Cruz cemetery in Dili, East Timor on 12 November. Others, including a foreign journalist, were reportedly beaten during the incident and scores were said to have been detained. The victims were among hundreds of people who had gone to the grave of Sebastiao (Gomes) Rangel, a young man killed on 28 October when Indonesian troops entered the parish church of Motael where he and about 20 other political activists had been hiding.

Amnesty International is calling for an immediate and thorough investigation into the circumstances of the reported killings. It is seriously concerned for the safety of those arrested and is urging that those detained solely for their non-violent political activities or beliefs be immediately released and that, following their release, their safety be guaranteed. It is also calling on the Indonesian authorities to ensure that those responsible for extrajudicial executions or for the ill-treatment of prisoners be brought promptly to justice.

According to eyewitnesses, the mourners had attended a memorial mass for Sebastiao (Gomes) Rangel at about 7:30 am before walking to the Santa Cruz cemetery where he was buried. At or near the cemetery, security forces reportedly opened fire on the mourners, leaving at least twenty either dead or wounded. Some reports have placed the number of dead at between 50 and 100. According to one such report, more than 60 casualties, some dead and others wounded, were reportedly taken to the military hospital in Dili. Eyewitnesses said that the procession of several hundred people was peaceful although some members of the group had shouted pro-independence slogans and a flag of the resistance movement Fretilin could be seen.

A number of people were said to have been beaten during the incident, among them a US journalist, Alan Nairn, who had been in East Timor for several days. A third foreigner, whose identity is not known, was also reported to have been wounded in the incident.

Scores of people were believed to have been arrested in connection with the incident. Eyewitnesses said that the streets of Dili were deserted for much of the day, and that security forces were roaming the streets firing their weapons indiscriminately and carrying out arrests. Many of those arrested were believed to have been taken to the police headquarters in Dili, and there were fears that they might be at risk of ill-treatment or torture.

An Indonesian military official told reporters on 12 November: "If there has been a shooting you should get the information from Jakarta." Amnesty International sought official confirmation and clarification of the reported killings and arrests from Indonesian government representatives, but has not yet received a response. An official at the Governor's office in East Timor told a journalist that there had been shootings, but provided no further details. In a statement later in the day, Indonesian military authorities confirmed that several people had been killed and others injured. They said that security forces had tried to disperse the "protesters" in "persuasive ways, but they put up resistance and attacked the officers." Military authorities also said that they had seized a number of weapons after the incident.

BACKGROUND INFORMATION:

The incident at the cemetery in Dili occurred in the context of heightened tension over a visit to East Timor by a delegation of Portuguese parliamentarians. The visit was postponed shortly before the delegation was scheduled to arrive in early November. Sebastiao (Gomes) Rangel was one of two people who were reportedly killed on 28 October 1991 when Indonesian security forces opened fire in the compound of Motael Church, also in Dili. Military officials claimed the victims had died during a fight between pro-independence activists and "passers-by". Witnesses claimed that the "passers-by" were in fact military intelligence agents who had come to arrest the political activists. (See UA 357/91, ASA 21/18/91 28 October 1991; and follow up ASA 21/19/91 30 October 1991).

Indonesian forces invaded East Timor in 1975 in the aftermath of Portugal's withdrawal from its former colony. Since that time Amnesty International has continued to document serious human rights violations by Indonesian security forces in the territory, including extrajudicial executions, torture and ill-treatment, "disappearance" and political imprisonment.

At least 30 people, and possibly many more, were killed by Indonesian security forces in 1990 and early 1991 in apparent extrajudicial executions. A pattern of short-term detention, ill-treatment and torture of political detainees appears to have worsened in the last year. More than 400 people have been detained in East Timor since late 1988 for their alleged involvement in pro-independence political activities; at least 200 of them since early 1990. Many may be or may have been prisoners of conscience and many have reportedly been ill-treated or tortured in custody. Forms of torture have included beatings with iron bars, batons and fists, burning with lighted cigarettes, slashing with razor blades and immersion for long periods in fetid water.

RECOMMENDED ACTION: Telegrams/telexes/faxes/express and airmail letters:

- expressing serious concern at reports that Indonesian troops opened fire on an apparently peaceful memorial procession in East Timor killing an estimated 20 and possibly many more people and wounding others; noting also that soldiers reportedly beat some of the people at the gathering;
- expressing concern at reports that, following this incident, a number of people were detained and are now believed to be at risk of torture or ill-treatment;
- urging the authorities to conduct a prompt and impartial investigation into these reports, with the results of the investigation to be made public; and asking to be informed of the progress of the investigation;
- seeking assurances that those in detention will be treated humanely, and that lawyers, doctors and relatives will be allowed access to the detainees;
- asking the authorities to release those detained solely for their non-violent political activities or beliefs;
- calling on the authorities to ensure that all those believed responsible for unlawful killings or ill-treatment of prisoners are brought to justice.
