Title: Kenya: political violence spirals

Abstract: Parts of the Rift Valley have again been affected by politically motivated violence after the elections of December 1997. The attacks followed a similar pattern to those affecting the run-up to the previous elections in 1992 where supporters of the ruling Kenya African National Union attacked members of the Kikuyu community considered to be supporting the opposition. This time local ethnic divisions have been deliberately enflamed and members of the Kikuyu have retaliated with violence. Many people have been killed or displaced. There is evidence that violence that is 'apparently' happening of its own accord is actually being organised and assisted by outside groups.

Abstract: Amnesty International is concerned about those who are still detained following the 4 June 1989 crackdown against pro-democracy protesters. This document sites examples of people who are still imprisoned after unfair trials for their activities during the protest. Many were convicted of "counter revolutionary" offences which are no longer crimes under Chinese law. AI calls upon the

the government to address these human rights violations and grant an amnesty for all 1989 pro-democracy prisoners.

Fifteen-year-old Yumlembam Sanamacha "disappeared" after being arrested with two other juveniles by members of the Indian army on 12 February 1998. He was seen being tortured on the roadside shortly after his arrest. When investigations were made into his whereabouts the army denied he was in their custody but later admitted he had been arrested and had escaped. Since then the army has made several attempts to prevent a judicial inquiry into the "disappearance".

Two men convicted with him, Prum Mean Rith and Sos Kasem, are suffering from serious medical conditions which require medical treatment not available in the prison. Both men gave evidence against Srun Vong Vannak at his trial but have since retracted their confessions, which they claim were made under duress while in incommunicado detention.
