ESCALATION IN ANTI-LGBTI ATTACKS IN MACEDONIA

A series of homophobic attacks in Macedonia in June and July has led to grave concerns for the safety of LGBTI people and organizations. In June, during Pride Week in the capital Skopje, the LGBTI centre was attacked by around 30 people and on 5 July, unidentified suspects attempted to set fire to the centre.

Over the past few years, lesbian, gay, bisexual, transgender and intersex (LGBTI) people and their property in Macedonia has been subjected to repeated homophobic attacks, including in June and July 2013.

On 22 June, during Skopje’s Pride week, a crowd of more than 30 people attacked the LGBTI Support Centre, where 40 LGBTI activists were watching a film screening. The crowd shouted homophobic slogans, threatened the activists at the Centre, and threw stones, bottles, and bricks at the building. Subsequently, one of the organizers of the event, from the NGO LGBT United Macedonia received several death threats on Facebook. On 25 June, a crowd assembled outside the house of Petar Stojkovikj, an openly gay actor and activist, throwing stones and hurling homophobic abuse and threats; the actor and his partner were inside the house. On 5 July, an attempted arson attack on the LGBTI Support Centre took place. Police reportedly found evidence that tiles had been removed from the roof, and petrol poured on the roof beams, which were then set alight.

These latest incidents are amongst many repeated verbal attacks in the media, by government officials and by non-state actors against the LGBTI community. They underscore the urgent need for protection in law against any forms of discrimination on the grounds of sexual orientation or gender identity. Macedonia’s Anti-Discrimination Law fails to prohibit discrimination on the grounds of sexual orientation. Despite local and international criticism, including by the EU and UN treaty bodies, the government has refused to amend the law. Local NGOs have started to draft a law on hate crimes against the LGBTI population. The government should follow up on this initiative and take appropriate measures to tackle homophobic and transphobic hate crimes.

Please write immediately in English or your own language:

- Urge the Minister of Interior to end the climate of impunity for homophobic attacks by acknowledging and condemning publicly these crimes, and ensure that impartial, thorough and prompt investigations are conducted into the June and July attacks, and into all previous attacks on the lives or property of LGBT people or organizations, with those found responsible brought to justice;

- Urge the Prime Minister and other ministers to introduce amendments to the anti-discrimination legislation to include sexual orientation and gender identity as specific grounds for discrimination;

- Urge all ministers without delay and in consultation with LGBTI organizations, to introduce legislation prohibiting hate crime, specifically including hate crimes based on sexual orientation and gender identity, as well as ethnicity, race, gender and other grounds for discrimination recognized in international standards.
