6. INTRODUCTION

The Assembly of Heads of State and Government of the Organization of African Unity (OAU) adopted in 1981 the African Charter on Human and Peoples' Rights (African Charter or Charter).<sup>1</sup> The Charter which came into force on 21 October 1986 has been ratified by all the OAU member States.<sup>2</sup>

The African Charter guarantees civil, political, economic, social and cultural rights. In addition, it proclaims collective rights as well as individual duties. Specifically, the Charter includes the right to life and the integrity of the person; right to fair trial; freedom from torture, cruel, inhuman or degrading punishment; right to liberty and security of person; right to health and right to education. Unlike other international or regional human rights treaties, the Charter does not allow states to derogate from their treaty obligations even during states of emergency.<sup>3</sup>

The only mechanism created under the Charter to supervise State Parties' compliance is the African Commission on Human and Peoples' Rights (African Commission). Its four areas of mandate are: promotional activities, protective activities (including complaints), the examination of state party reports, and the interpretation of the African Charter.

Despite the international acclaim that heralded the adoption of the African Charter in 1981, and its subsequent entry into force in 1986, the demand for the reform of the African human rights mechanism began within five years of its existence. One reason for this demand is the lack of adequate or effective enforcement institutions.

While the African Commission has an elaborate promotional mandate under the African Charter, it does not possess sufficient protective powers. In fact, neither the Charter nor the Commission provides for enforceable remedies, or a mechanism for encouraging and tracking State compliance with decisions that the Commission makes. Despite some positive development in the Commission's individual complaint mechanism,<sup>4</sup> the decisions it renders are non-binding, and attract little, if any, attention from governments of Member States.

The Assembly of Heads of State and Government of the OAU has acknowledged the general ineffectiveness of the African human rights mechanism. During its summit in Tunis, Tunisia in June 1994, the Assembly adopted a resolution in which the Secretary-General of the organization was called upon to summon experts to meet on the establishment of an African Court of Human Rights.<sup>5</sup> The series of meetings and consultations that ensued produced a draft Protocol on the African Court on Human and Peoples' Rights (Protocol), which was later adopted by the OAU in Ouagadougou, Burkina Faso in June 1998.<sup>6</sup>

The Protocol was inspired by existing regional instruments, which established the European and Inter-American Human Rights Courts, the Statute of the International Court of Justice as well as the Report of the International Law Commission on the International Criminal Tribunal.<sup>7</sup>

Amnesty International supports the establishment of an African Court of Human and Peoples' Rights (African Court or Court) as a means of strengthening the regional mechanism for human rights in Africa.<sup>8</sup> Given the continent's history of serious human rights violations, a court of human rights is a potentially significant development in the protection of human rights at the continental level. The adoption of the Protocol by the OAU thus demonstrates a resolve by African governments to realise the spirit of the African Charter and ensure the protection of human rights in Africa.

The Court, once established, will consider cases referred to it by the African Commission and state parties to the Protocol and, where a state party accepts such a jurisdiction, by individuals and non-governmental organizations (NGOs). An African Court is capable of enhancing the effectiveness of the Charter by supplementing and reinforcing the African Commission. Similarly, through it victims of human rights violations or their representatives would have recourse to judicial process on demand. The Court possesses the authority to issue a binding and enforceable decision in such circumstances.

In addition, an African Court would provide the platform for the articulation of international legal principles at the regional level. At the same time, domestic courts in Africa will look to the Court for direction and precedents in their application of human rights instruments at the domestic level. Ultimately, the Court can be an important instrument in sustaining constitutional democracies and facilitating the fulfilment of human and peoples' rights, which are now universally recognized.

Nevertheless, the success of the African Court will, to a large extent, depend on the operational efficiency of the African Commission, as the two are designed to work together and compliment each other.<sup>9</sup> Amnesty International believes that simultaneous with efforts to establish the African Court, the OAU should endeavour to further strengthen the role, functioning and working practices of the African Commission.

Unfortunately, four years after its adoption, the Protocol establishing the Court has yet to enter into force. Article 34 of the Protocol states that it will come into force after fifteen instruments of ratification or accession have been deposited with the Secretary-General of the OAU. As at June 2002, only five States have ratified the Protocol. They are: Burkina Faso, Mali, Senegal, The Gambia and Uganda. In contrast, the Constitutive Act of the African Union has attracted an overwhelming support from African governments in a record time: it took the Assembly of Heads of State and Government only nine months to formally establish the African Union.<sup>10</sup>

While this is a positive sign, given African leaders' expressed determination in the Constitutive Act to promote and protect human and peoples' rights, consolidate democratic institutions and culture, good governance and the rule of law, Amnesty International believes that the apparent reluctance of most African governments to commit themselves to the Protocol constitutes a step backward in the realization of these principles. African governments must begin to translate their expressed commitment into action by ratifying the Protocol, as well as accepting the competence of the Court to deal with complaints submitted by individuals and NGOs.

<sup>10</sup> See CONSTITUTIVE ACT OF THE AFRICAN UNION, adopted by the Thirty-sixth Ordinary Session of the Assembly of Heads of State and Government of the OAU on 11 July 2000 at Lome, Togo. It entered into force on 26 May 2001 during the 38th anniversary of the establishment of the OAU. The African Union, which will replace the OAU in July 2002, is modelled after the European Union. The Constitutive Act provides for some new organs that were not provided for in the Charter of the OAU, namely, the Pan-African Parliament; the Court of Justice which was initially provided for in the African Economic Community (AEC) treaty; financial institutions such as the African Central Bank, the African Monetary Fund, and the African Investment Bank. There are also Specialised technical Committees and Commissions along the lines of the OAU. See Amnesty International, African Union: a New Opportunity for the Promotion and Protection of Human Rights in Africa, AI Index: IOR 63/002/2002.

This report aims to promote awareness of the Protocol and to secure the establishment of an effective, impartial and independent African Court on Human and Peoples' Rights. The report analyses the provisions of the Protocol in terms of the Court's potential to reinforce the protection of human rights in the continent.

The report also examines the relationship between the African Commission and the Court in the exercise of their various mandates under the Charter and Protocol, respectively. Finally, it makes recommendations regarding the role, which the OAU political authority should play in ensuring the establishment of the Court and its effective and independent functioning.

7. ESTABLISHING THE AFRICAN COURT ON HUMAN AND PEOPLES' RIGHTS

2.1 Structure and Composition of the Court

Article 1 of the Protocol establishes the Court, with an emphasis that it is established within the framework of the Organization of African Unity. The Court shall consist of eleven judges who must be nationals of the member states of the OAU. State parties to the Protocol may propose up to three candidates, two of which must be their own nationals. However, no two judges may be nationals of the same State.

Similarly, judges are to be elected by secret ballot from a list of candidates submitted by States parties to the Protocol. While state members of the OAU that are not parties to the Protocol are barred from nominating candidates, they nevertheless participate in the election. They are thus afforded the opportunity to comment on the suitability of candidates who may be their nationals. This would make it possible for competent judges to be elected to the Court even though they are nationals of Member states of the OAU, that have not ratified the African Charter.

Judges are elected<sup>11</sup> in an individual capacity and not as representatives of states. They must be elected from among jurists of high moral character and of recognized practical, judicial or academic competence and experience in the field of human rights. Judges are thus required to discharge their functions independently and impartially. In fact, after their election, judges must make a declaration that they would discharge their duties impartially and faithfully.

<sup>11</sup> Under Article 15(1) of the Protocol, judges of the Court are to be elected to six-year term and may be re-elected only once. Similarly, the term of four judges elected at the first election would expire at the end of two years, and the term of four more judges expiring at the end of four years. Also, all judges except the President shall perform their functions on a part-time basis. However, the Assembly of the OAU may change the arrangement of part-time, as it deems appropriate. Nevertheless, while part-time appointment may be justified in the short term, perhaps because it is not envisaged that the Court will be inundated with very many cases in its early years, the realization of a full-time Court in the long term will be crucial to the Court overall effectiveness.

It is desirable that these criteria for selection are strictly applied to ensure that the candidates have some degree of expertise relevant to their position. While this does not in itself guarantee independence, it contributes towards the realization of a more competent professional body.<sup>12</sup> In addition, greater participation by NGOs and consultation during the selection process at the national level would be a positive development.

The Protocol requires that adequate gender representation be taken into consideration in both nominating and electing members of the Court. This provision would encourage qualified men and women to be nominated and elected to the Court. Without a gender balance in the composition of the Court key issues relating to the violations of human rights of women are likely to be overlooked. Indeed, all states including Member States of the OAU have “committed themselves to gender balance... in all international bodies and institutions, notably by presenting and promoting more women candidates”.<sup>13</sup> It is also important that the nomination process considers it necessary to achieve geographical representation and representation of different legal traditions.

The Court has a single court structure without division into chambers or grand chambers. Its judgment decided by majority shall be final and not subject to appeal. Article 23 of the Protocol provides that the Court shall examine cases brought before it if it has a quorum of at least seven judges. Under Article 22 of the Protocol, a judge who is the national of any State, which is a party to a case submitted to the Court, is excluded from hearing the case.

Article 25 of the Protocol empowers the Assembly of the OAU to determine the seat of the Court, but with input from the Court where a change of the seat of the Court is necessary. Also, the Court could convene in the territory of any Member state of the OAU when the majority of the Court considers it desirable, subject to the consent of the State concerned. However, it is important that the Court is afforded necessary facilities for it to function effectively wherever it convenes.

<sup>13</sup> See Report of the Fourth World Conference on Women (Beijing, 4-15 September 1995), A/Conf.177/20, para. 299.

Under Article 20, a judge whose seat becomes vacant as a result of death or resignation must be replaced unless the remaining period of the term of the judge is less than one hundred and eighty days.

Unlike the situation under the African Charter where the Secretary-General of the OAU is responsible for appointing the Secretary and staff of the African Commission, the Court shall appoint its own Registrar and other staff of the registry from among nationals of Member states of the OAU. Amnesty International believes that the power of the Court to hire its staff will enhance its overall independence from the OAU.

2.2 Applicable Laws and Consideration of Cases

The Court would have power to entertain cases challenging violations of the rights, including civil and political rights and economic, social and cultural rights guaranteed under the African Charter, the Protocol and relevant human rights instruments.<sup>14</sup> Article 8 of the Protocol specifies that the Rules of Procedure of the Court shall lay down the detailed conditions under which the Court shall consider cases brought before it, bearing in mind the complementarity between the Commission and the Court.

The Court is required to rule on admissibility of the cases taking into account the provisions of Article 56 of the African Charter.<sup>15</sup> Similarly, the Court may request the opinion of the Commission on admissibility of cases submitted by individuals and NGOs when deciding on their admissibility. Also, in considering cases, the Court is required to conduct its proceedings in public under Article 10(1) of the Protocol, except as may be provided for in its Rules of Procedure. However, whatever the Court decides, the protection of the interest of children may require a restriction on public hearing.

<sup>14</sup> The Protocol also enjoins the Court to reach amicable settlement in a case pending before it in accordance with the provisions of the Charter.

<sup>15</sup> Article 56 prescribes among others that communications submitted to the African Commission must indicate their authors, are compatible with the African Charter and are sent after exhausting local remedies, if any. See text of the African Charter on Human and Peoples' Rights in Annex iii.

Similarly, the Court shall hear submissions by all parties and if deemed necessary, hold an enquiry. The States concerned shall assist by providing relevant facilities for the efficient handling of the case. This provision is especially important given that recalcitrant States may wish to destroy or withhold crucial evidence. Under Article 26(2) of the Protocol, the Court is empowered in its discretion to receive written and oral evidence including expert testimony on the basis of which it is required to make its decision.

The Protocol provides for the choice of legal representative by a party before the Court and recommends free legal representation in the interest of justice. Given the abject poverty in many regions of Africa, Amnesty International believes the provision of free legal representation for indigent parties is essential in trying to ensure that parties irrespective of their economic situation are heard by the Court and thus contribute to the realization of fair trial. While NGOs may assist in the provision of legal assistance to those who come before the Court and may require it, the primary responsibility should be that of State parties.

In addition, the Protocol provides that any person, witnesses or representative of the parties who appear before the Court shall have all the protection and enjoy all the facilities “in accordance with international law, necessary for discharging their functions, tasks and duties in relation to the Court”. This would give assurance to individuals or groups of persons that they can appear before the Court without fear of retribution.

2.3 Jurisdiction and Access to the Court

The Protocol contains various shades of jurisdiction and access to the Court, ranging from adjudicatory or contentious jurisdiction to advisory jurisdiction. The contentious jurisdiction prescribed is either compulsory or optional. This is the ordinary jurisdiction of a human rights court or other international tribunal in determining contentious disputes that come before it on merit.

Under Article 3 of the Protocol, the main object of the Court’s adjudicatory function is to rule on whether a State has violated any of the rights contained in the African Charter, the Protocol of the Court, or any other relevant human rights instruments ratified by the State concerned, for which the victim seeks redress. This provision has the potential of extending the jurisdiction of the Court over treaties dealing with issues of human rights applicable in Africa, such as the OAU Convention on Refugees and the African Charter on the Rights and Welfare of the Child. By exercising this jurisdiction the Court is able to apply these instruments and issue a decision on merit, which may include the award of reparations or other remedies where the Court finds a violation.

However, only the following entities have the right of direct access to the Court: the African Commission; the State party which has lodged a complaint to the Commission; the State party against which a complaint has been lodged at the Commission; the State whose citizen is a victim of human rights violations and African Intergovernmental Organizations. Similarly, a State that has an interest before the Court could request permission from the Court to join in the proceedings.

Nevertheless, a prior Communication to the Commission, either by a State, or against a State, is generally required for instituting proceedings before the Court. Thus, only the African Commission has unlimited access to the Court. The Commission's unlimited access to the Court should be effectively used to refer cases and initiate new ones to the Court, especially cases which reveal the existence of a series of serious and massive violations of human and peoples' rights under the African Charter.

NGOs with observer status before the Commission and individuals may only institute cases before the Court if the State against which they want to proceed has made a declaration accepting such NGO and individual submission of cases. Without such declaration, the Court would not, under any circumstance receive any petition from an NGO or individual.

Amnesty International believes that unless States accept the jurisdiction of the Court over individual complaints, the object and purpose of the African Charter and the Protocol to make States accountable for human rights violations within their jurisdiction would be seriously undermined.

Similarly, it is important that the right of States whose citizens are victims of human rights violations to submit cases before the Court is not used to deny individuals' ability to seek a vindication of their rights, especially where the respondent State has accepted the jurisdiction of the Court to receive cases from individuals and NGOs.

Another sphere of the Court's jurisdiction is advisory. Under Article 4 of the Protocol, a member State of the OAU, the OAU, any of its organs or any African organization recognized by the OAU may request the Court to provide an opinion on any legal matter relating to the Charter or any other relevant human rights instruments. However, the subject matter of the opinion sought must not be related to a matter being examined by the African Commission.

This advisory jurisdiction would enable the Court to formally render legal opinions on issues presented before it. However, those opinions have no binding legal effect in the form of requiring positive or negative action from parties. Nevertheless, advisory opinions can go a long way to affect the conduct of States with respect to human rights. Indeed, the advisory function of the Court could prove very effective if States would approach the Court to test the compatibility of their domestic laws with the African Charter and the Protocol.

Similarly, the advisory jurisdiction of the Court would be greatly enhanced by NGO participation, by among others providing the Court with amicus curiae briefs. This participation would further enrich the jurisprudence of the Court even though advisory opinions per se are not binding.

2.4 Judgements of the Court

The Court is empowered to make findings and order appropriate remedies when there is a violation of any rights, whether civil and political rights, or economic, social and cultural rights. Where the Court finds that there has been a violation of a human right, it is required under the Protocol to make appropriate orders to remedy the violation, including the payment of fair compensation. It is important that the Court avoids a restrictive interpretation of its remedial powers by ordering adequate reparation whenever the interest of justice demands.

Similarly, Article 27(2) provides that “in cases of extreme gravity and urgency, and when necessary to avoid irreparable harm to persons, the Court shall adopt such provisional measures as it deems necessary. The ability of the Court to grant provisional measures demonstrates the preventive function of international protection of human rights. If effectively used, it could serve as a veritable tool for ensuring human rights protection in Africa.

The Protocol also makes provisions for the judgment of the Court and its execution. The judgment of the Court decided by majority would be final and not subject to appeal. However, the Court is empowered to review its decisions in the light of new evidence under the conditions that would be set out in its Rules of Procedure. At the same time, the Court enjoys the power to interpret its decisions. In cases where the judgment of the Court is not unanimous, either in whole or in part, any judge would be entitled to deliver a separate or dissenting opinion.

The Court must however render its judgment within ninety days of having completed its deliberations. The Protocol requires that the judgment of the Court be reasoned, and must be read in open Court, due notice having been given to the parties. Regarding the execution of the judgment of the Court, States that ratify the Protocol undertake to comply with the judgment of the Court in any case to which they are parties, and within the time limit stipulated by the Court, as well as guarantee its execution.

However, the Court's judgment must be brought to the notice of the parties involved and Member States of the OAU as well as the African Commission. The Council of Ministers of the OAU would also be notified, and shall have the responsibility of monitoring the execution of the judgment on behalf of the Assembly of Heads of State and Government. The Court does not possess any express power to ensure that its judgments are adhered to, and thus appears powerless to react when its decisions are ignored. Instead, the Court is required to submit to each regular session of the OAU Assembly, a report on its work during the previous year.

The report would include cases in which a State has not complied with the Court's judgment. The OAU Assembly must protect the integrity of the system by adopting whatever political measures that are necessary to secure compliance with the Court's judgment. It is hoped that the African Union when in place would provide the political platform to achieve this.<sup>16</sup>

2.5 Independence of Judges

Amnesty International believes that the judges that will be elected must have proven competence, independence and impartiality, and be free to carry out their duties without external interference. Indeed, it is essential that judges are seen to be independent and impartial.

Article 17 of the Protocol provides that the independence of the Judges of the Court shall be fully ensured in accordance with international law. It requires judges to avoid conflict of interests by restraining them from hearing cases in which they may have previously taken part as agents, counsel, advocates for one of the parties, or as a member of a national or international court, or a commission of inquiry, or in any other capacity.

The Court will have jurisdiction to determine any dispute or doubt arising from this conflict of interest provision, given the scope of possible areas of conflicts under the Protocol. Article 17 also provides protection for judges in the performance of their duties by conferring on them all immunities that are extended to diplomatic agents in international law from the moment of their election and throughout their term of office. Thus, judges would not be liable for any decision or opinion issued in exercise of their function.

Article 18 of the Protocol provides that the position of the judge of the Court is incompatible with any activity that might interfere with the independence or impartiality of such a judge or the demands of his office. This provision will ensure that the judges of the Court are not engaged in activities that conflict with their role as judges. The provision in fact accords with the recommendation by the Chairpersons of the UN Treaties Bodies that: "State Parties to human rights treaties should refrain from nominating or electing to treaty bodies persons performing political functions or occupying positions which were not readily reconcilable with obligations of independent experts under the given treaty.”<sup>17</sup>

The absence of a similar provision in the African Charter with regard to members of the African Commission has made it somewhat problematic to clarify what might constitute an incompatible activity of members of the Commission, especially when some members of the Commission also serve in their home governments either as ministers or ambassadors. This clearly may cast doubt on their ability to function as totally independent experts in discharging their functions.

Under Article 19 of the Protocol, a judge shall not be suspended or removed from office unless by the unanimous decision of the other judges of the Court, where the judge concerned has been found to be no longer fulfilling the requirements for judgeship of the Court. Such a decision of the Court will become final unless it is set aside by the OAU at its next session. However, this position somewhat subordinates the Court to the Assembly of the OAU, and may jeopardise its overall independence. It is the duty of all governmental and other institutions to respect and observe the independence of the judges. In this connection, State parties to the Protocol should provide adequate resources to the Court to enable it perform its functions properly.

<sup>17</sup> Report of 8th Meeting of Chairpersons of the UN Treaty Bodies, UN General Assembly, UN Doc. A/52/507, para. 68.

2.6 Funding of the Court

The Protocol also provides for the funding of the Court. In its Article 32, expenses of the Court, emoluments and allowances for judges and the budget of its registry shall be determined and borne by the OAU, in accordance with the criteria laid down by the OAU, in consultation with the Court. This is an improvement on the Article 44 of the African Charter, which merely states “provision shall be made for the emoluments and allowances of the members of the Commission in the regular budget of the Organization of African Unity.” It is essential that similar priority attention be given to the funding of both the Court and the Commission if they are to function effectively.

3. RELATIONSHIP BETWEEN THE COURT AND THE AFRICAN COMMISSION

As stated above, the establishment of an African Court of Human and Peoples’ Rights will impact the work of the African Commission. Nevertheless, the coexistence of the Court and African Commission requires a proper clarification of the functions to be performed by each of these bodies in the new dispensation.

While the mandate of the African Commission is set out in Article 45 of the African Charter, detailing promotional, protective and other functions, Article 2 of the Protocol dealing with the relationship between the Commission and the Court does not make any specific provisions on that relationship, as regards particular functions.

Rather, it generally provides that “[t]he Court shall, bearing in mind the provisions of this Protocol, complement the protective mandate of the African Commission on Human and Peoples’ Rights hereinafter referred to as ‘the Commission,’ conferred upon it by the African Charter on Human and Peoples’ Rights, hereinafter referred to as ‘the Charter’.”

An inference that can be drawn from this provision is that the function of the Court is limited to the protective provisions of the Charter. Thus, it emphasises that the Court will not replace the Commission. Instead, it will strengthen its protective mandate. Similarly, the Commission would retain its protective and promotional mandate as established in the African Charter, but have access to submit cases to the Court as well.

In essence, both the Court and the Commission would share the protective mandate. There remains potential for duplication of efforts by the Commission and the Court given that Article 45(3) of the Charter vests the Commission with the power to interpret all provisions of the Charter at the request of a State party, an institution of the OAU or an African organization recognised by the OAU.

However, the Commission’s interpretative mandate is limited only to the African Charter. On the other hand, Article 3 of the Protocol extends the jurisdiction of the Court to the interpretation and application of the Charter, the Protocol, and any other relevant human rights instruments ratified by the State concerned. A dispute relating to any interpretation made by the Commission can be submitted to the Court. There is thus no doubt that the Court would occupy a primary place in the interpretation of not only the provisions of the Charter but other human rights documents that are applicable before it.

Nevertheless, to avoid dispute, unnecessary competition or duplication, it is essential that the protective function of the Commission should be exclusively vested in the Court. The Commission would thus be more effective to concern itself with promotional functions, including the consideration of State reports and facilitating dialogue with NGOs and government institutions in Member States, to encourage the incorporation of human rights standards into State policies and domestic legislation.

In addition, the division of labour would enhance cooperation and mutual reinforcement between the two institutions and ultimately contribute to the fulfilment of human and peoples’ rights in Africa. The Rules of Procedure of the Court will be vital to the success or failure of the African Court as they will create the practical framework for the operation of the provisions of the Protocol and regulate the relationship between the Court and the Commission. The effective functioning of the Commission itself however is of paramount importance if this relationship is to be successful.<sup>18</sup>

4. CONCLUSIONS

The African Commission has made steady albeit not remarkable attempt to entrench itself as an effective regional human rights mechanism. Despite the improvement of the African Commission over the years, its overall effectiveness is of paramount importance. Since the present system does not provide for effective remedy, the adoption in 1998 of a Protocol establishing an African Court on Human and Peoples' Rights is a welcome development. The Court will only come into force after fifteen instruments of ratification or accession have been deposited with the Secretary-General of the OAU.

The Court, once established would complement and reinforce the overall functions of the African Commission, and has the potential to make a difference in the promotion and protection of human and peoples' rights in Africa by providing justice in individual cases as well as in inter-state case. However, the Protocol is yet to receive the required number of ratifications as only five States are at present parties to it. The delay in putting the Court in place is unfortunate and constitutes a step backward in the realization of the African Charter and the fulfilment of the commitment expressed by the OAU in the Constitutive Act of the African Union.

Amnesty International welcomes the ratifications by Burkina Faso, Mali, Senegal, The Gambia and Uganda and urges states that are yet to do so to ratify the Protocol without further delay. In addition, states should make declarations accepting individual and NGO access to the Court. Without such declarations, the integrity of the Court would be seriously undermined.

5. SUMMARY OF RECOMMENDATIONS TO THE OAU/AU MEMBER STATES

- Ratify the Protocol establishing the African Court on Human and Peoples' Rights without further delay. In addition, OAU member states, including those that have already ratified, should make declarations accepting individual and NGO access to the Court.
- Review their legislation and practice, to ensure that these are in full conformity with the Protocol. Amnesty International urges states to meet all their obligations under the African Charter.
- Ensure that the Judges that will be elected into the Court have expertises relevant to their position. States should also ensure adequate gender balance and representation of the different regions and legal systems in the OAU/African Union.
- Provide essential resources, including funding to the Court once established. The African Commission should also be given adequate resources to carry out its task effectively.
- Ensure that the Court is allowed to function independently, impartially and effectively, and to develop its own case law.
- Take all necessary steps to cooperate fully with the Court, including by according high priority to the prompt compliance with the judgments and decisions of the Court.
- Ensure that interested people are given the opportunity to be heard and to be represented by legal counsel if they cannot afford one. Also, parties and witnesses who appear before the Court should be protected and not be made to face retribution.

Annex i: Protocol to the African Charter on Human and Peoples' Rights on the Establishment of an African Court of Human and Peoples' Rights

The Member States of the Organization of African Unity hereinafter referred to as the OAU, States Parties to the African Charter on Human and Peoples' Rights.

Considering that the Charter of the Organization of African Unity recognizes that freedom, equality, justice, peace and dignity are essential objectives for the achievement of the legitimate aspirations of the African Peoples;

Noting that the African Charter on Human and Peoples' Rights reaffirms adherence to the principles of Human and Peoples' Rights, freedoms and duties contained in the declarations, conventions and other instruments adopted by the Organization of African Unity, and other international organizations;

Recognizing that the two-fold objective of the African Commission on Human and Peoples' Rights is to ensure on the one hand promotion and on the other protection of Human and Peoples' Rights, freedom and duties;
