

URGENT ACTION

TUNISIAN PRISONER AT SERIOUS RISK OF TORTURE

Ramzi Romdhani, a prisoner serving a long sentence at Mornaguia Prison near Tunis, has been denied family visits since 4 February 2010. When he was last able to speak to his relatives, he told them that he was being held in solitary confinement and had been threatened with torture. He has previously reported that he was tortured and otherwise ill-treated on at least three occasions in 2009. He is now at further risk of torture and other ill-treatment.

On 4 February, Ramzi Romdhani told his family that he had been threatened with torture and other ill-treatment by a senior official of Mornaguia Prison after he spoke to the United Nations Special Rapporteur on the promotion and protection of human rights and fundamental freedoms while countering terrorism. The Special Rapporteur was allowed to visit Mornaguia Prison in January 2010. Ramzi Romdhani told his family that he had been held in solitary confinement since the Special Rapporteur's visit.

Ramzi Romdhani has not been permitted visits from his family since 4 February; They have been turned away on six consecutive occasions and denied permission on three occasions to leave food and clothing for prison guards to pass on to him. This far exceeds what is permitted under Tunisian law, which provides that a prisoner can be denied family visits and food for no more than 15 days; and can be held in solitary confinement for no more than 10 days.

Ramzi Romdhani was arrested in April 2007 and is now serving a sentence totalling 29 years in prison imposed under anti-terrorism legislation in nine separate cases. He has previously alleged that he was tortured and otherwise ill-treated on at least three occasions: in April 2009, August 2009 and December 2009 (see original UA and follow-up), but to date the Tunisian authorities have failed to conduct an independent investigation, as required under international law. In December, the prison doctor at Mornaguia told Ramzi Romdhani that he required surgery to safeguard his sight but it is not known whether this has been provided. He is reported to have sustained serious eye injuries while detained for interrogation by officials of the Department of State Security of the Ministry of Interior in Tunis.

TUNISIAN PRISONER AT SERIOUS RISK OF TORTURE

ADDITIONAL INFORMATION

On 31 December 2009, Ramzi Romdhani told his brother that he was tortured on 24 and 25 December after he had been transferred to the Department of State Security (DSS) of the Ministry of Interior in the Tunisian capital, Tunis, from Mornaguia Prison. He said he was tortured for two days and interrogated in connection with other cases. He told his brother that he was beaten, had his nails and fingers burned and that his head was plunged repeatedly in hot water for about 30 minutes. He said he was beaten on his eyes and sustained serious eye injuries. During the visit, his brother was able to observe several bruises on his body and burn marks on his fingers.

In April 2009, Ramzi Romdhani is reported to have been tortured and otherwise ill-treated by officers at Mornaguia Prison, by guards who beat him with sticks, kicked him while wearing military boots, inflicted cigarette burns on his body, and plunged his head repeatedly into a bucket of water causing him to fear drowning and eventually to lose consciousness.

In August 2009, he alleges that he was beaten by prison guards and then taken to the DSS where he was tortured, including with electric shocks, suspension and simulation of hanging.

His brother was arrested on 18 January 2010 at his home by eight DSS officers and detained incommunicado until 20 January, when he was released uncharged. His arrest is believed to have been linked to his efforts to expose and publicize the torture and other ill-treatment of Ramzi Romdhani, including his contacts with human rights lawyers and local and international human rights organizations.

Amnesty International has received numerous reports of torture and other ill-treatment by the Tunisian security forces. In virtually all cases, allegations of torture are not investigated and the perpetrators are not brought to justice. Individuals are most at risk of torture when held incommunicado. The most commonly reported methods of torture are beatings on the body, especially the soles of the feet; suspension by the ankles or in contorted positions; electric shocks; and burning with cigarettes. There are also reports of mock executions, sexual abuse, including rape with bottles and sticks, and threats of sexual abuse of female relatives.

Tunisia is a state party to the Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment, and the Tunisian authorities are under an obligation to prevent torture and to “ensure that its competent authorities proceed to a prompt and impartial investigation, wherever there is reasonable ground to believe that an act of torture has been committed in any territory under its jurisdiction”.

Tunisia’s anti-terrorism legislation has been repeatedly criticized by UN human rights bodies and local and international human rights organizations as overly general and broad, and could be used as a repressive measure to curtail legitimate dissent. Similar concerns were reiterated by the United Nations Human Rights Committee in March 2008 in its concluding observations regarding Tunisia and by the Special Rapporteur on the promotion and protection of human rights and fundamental freedoms while countering terrorism following his visit to Tunisia in January 2010.
