Amnesty International global award for human rights journalism

Amnesty International would like to invite entries for the Global Award for Human Rights Journalism 2004. This award recognises excellence in human rights journalism in the written media anywhere in the world. It is made for an article that has raised awareness and understanding of human rights issues, whether at a local, national or international level, within the areas covered by Amnesty International's vision and mission.

All entries must be nominated by, and submitted through, a non-governmental organisation (NGO), whether local, national or international. Entries can not be accepted directly from individual journalists, newspapers or other media.
