Amnesty International launches report on anti-Roma attacks in Hungary

A new report by Amnesty International shows how the Hungarian authorities fail to prevent and respond to violence against Roma and ensure justice for the victims.

Violent attacks against Roma in Hungary shows how racially motivated crimes impact on individual victims, communities and society as a whole and points out shortcomings in the Hungarian justice system that hinder the prevention of and response to such attacks.

Prior to the press conference, Amnesty International delegates will meet Hungarian officials to present the organization's recommendations.
