MAN 'DISAPPEARED' IN NORTH CAUCASUS

A man from Ingushetia, the North Caucasus, Russia, has been forcibly disappeared. Amir Chaniev was last seen on 4 September when 30-40 unidentified officers of law-enforcement agencies searched his family's flat and drove him away. His sister Karina Chanieva was unlawfully detained the next day.

In the early morning of 4 September around 30-40 unidentified armed and masked law enforcement officers burst into the Chanievs' flat in Ordzhonikidzevskaja village, Ingushetia. They forced the family out into the yard and carried out an unauthorised search on the flat. Amir Chaniev was ordered to go with them 'for a chat'. It was the last time his family saw him. His whereabouts continue to be unknown.

Later the same day, Amir Chaniev's mother and his 19-year-old sister Karina Chanieva were taken to the local police station. They were shown a picture of a man whom they identified as someone that Amir Chaniev had brought to their flat on 3 September and who was in their flat at the time of the raid. They were told that this man was on a 'wanted' list. The family, however, does not understand why this man was not detained during the search.

The police said that Amir Chaniev's mother could go but detained his sister Karina Chanieva for further questioning. The family said she was questioned without a lawyer present and made to sign a statement without reading it. The family state that Karina Chanieva was told that if she did not sign the document – which their fear incriminated her and her brother - she would never see him again and that the rest of the family would be shot. Fearing for her family, Karina Chanieva reportedly signed some papers. A state appointed lawyer was present when she signed the papers but reportedly did not give her any advice and left immediately after she signed the documents the police presented her with. Karina continues to be in detention and has allegedly been ill-treated.

ADDITIONAL INFORMATION

Ingushetia and the wider North Caucasus are affected by armed violence, and the security situation there is volatile. Armed groups have been launching sporadic attacks against law enforcement officials, but have also targeted civilians. The authorities' response is heavily reliant on the use of law enforcement agencies (police, secret services, and the military) whose members operate without transparency and public accountability, and often incognito, particularly during so-called counter-terrorist operations. There are widespread and persistent allegations that law enforcement officials use unlawful methods to combat armed violence with impunity, and human rights violations are systematic in Ingushetia and across the North Caucasus. Cases of forcible disappearances, unlawful detention, torture and ill-treatment, and extrajudicial execution, are regularly reported from the region.

Amnesty International has received numerous reports from Ingushetia of people being detained, in their homes or in the street, by masked members of law enforcement agencies who wear no insignia and give no explanation of their actions. While in some such cases the authorities later acknowledge that these people were detained by members of law enforcement officials, in many cases these people are "disappeared" and never heard of again, with the authorities failing to investigate effectively and establish their whereabouts. Sometimes the disappeared are later found dead. There have been cases when the authorities reported them as having put up armed resistance and killed in a shootout with law enforcement officials, although in some cases there is evidence suggesting that they may have been subjected to torture and then extrajudicially executed.

Amnesty International and other human rights organizations continue to receive information about torture and other ill-treatment in places of detention and during police investigation in Ingushetia. In many cases which have come to the attention of Amnesty International the complainant has been tortured or ill-treated in order for them to sign a "confession" or to incriminate another suspect.
