

URGENT ACTION

857 PEACEFUL PROTESTORS ARRESTED IN ONE DAY

On 6 September, 857 protesters were arrested in London, with more than 700 others arrested for similar offences in London and across the UK on previous weekends, for peacefully opposing the 'Palestine Action' ban. Approximately 114 have since been charged with terrorism-related offences under the UK's counter terror legislation and more charges are threatened. On 2 September, seven Defend Our Juries spokespeople were arrested in dawn raids and face sentences of up to nine years, for their part in organising these peaceful protests. Amnesty International calls on the relevant authorities to drop the existing charges and take no further action against these and any other individuals arrested and charged simply for the exercise of their rights to freedom of expression and peaceful assembly.

Dear Directors of Public Prosecutions for England and Wales, Northern Ireland and Lord Advocate,

Since the ban against 'Palestine Action' came into effect on 5 July, over 1,500 people have been arrested across the country for their engagement in acts of peaceful protest opposing the proscription. The majority of these arrests have followed protests organised by Defend Our Juries (DOJ), a grassroots campaigning group. As of 8 September, approximately 114 individuals across the UK have been formally charged with terror-related offences, under either section 12 or section 13 of the UK's 2000 Terrorism Act. At the time of writing, three individuals are known to be appearing in court on 16 September.

On 2 September, seven DOJ spokespeople were subject to dawn raids by police and arrested under section 12 of the Terrorism Act. These arrests were made just hours before a planned DOJ press conference announcing a mass action to be held on 6 September, against the 'Palestine Action' ban. All seven of these individuals have since been charged, one in Scotland and six in England, for organising and speaking on Zoom calls to brief activists who intended to join the mass peaceful protests. The six in England appeared in court on 4 September for bail hearings, at which the Crown Prosecution Service indicated that they would seek a sentence of between six to nine years if they are found guilty. They have been released on severely restrictive bail conditions, pending trial. On 6 September, DOJ's second mass protest went ahead as planned, at which 857 peaceful protesters were arrested. The London Metropolitan police put out a statement claiming there had been a coordinated violent effort by protest supporters against the police – in response Amnesty International put out a statement calling this a misrepresentation of the reality on the ground. Amnesty International observers who monitored the protest witnessed episodes of police aggression, including protesters being violently shoved and batons being drawn.

Under international human rights law, to which the UK is bound, any restriction on the rights to freedom of expression and peaceful assembly must be lawful, necessary and proportionate to achieving a legitimate aim. Criminalising speech in this context is only permitted when it incites violence, hatred or discrimination. Expressing support for Palestine Action does not in itself meet this threshold.

I urge you to uphold UK's human rights commitments and drop the charges and not pursue prosecutions against all those who participated in peaceful protests in support of 'Palestine Action'.

Yours sincerely,

ADDITIONAL INFORMATION

'Defend our Juries' is an activist-led, UK-based group that has made clear it neither promotes nor endorses violence. The arrested protesters come from a wide range of ages, professions and backgrounds, and a significant number of older adults. Protesters are peacefully expressing their outrage at Israel's ongoing genocide against Palestinians in Gaza, a viewpoint they are entitled to hold and express peacefully under international human rights law. Numerous human rights groups, including Amnesty International, have documented and exposed extensively Israel's continuing genocide against Palestinians in the Occupied Gaza Strip.

Prosecutions under terrorism-related legislation, even without a conviction, can have serious and lasting consequences on individuals. These include restrictive bail conditions, surveillance, reputational damage, mental health impact, and negative consequences on employment, education and travel. A conviction under laws like the Terrorism Act 2000 brings even more severe consequences: a lifelong criminal record, visa and immigration issues, loss of job opportunities, professional licenses, and access to services, along with long-term social stigma and psychological harm. When such prosecutions target peaceful protest and civil disobedience, they create a chilling effect—detering people from exercising their rights to free expression, protest, and political activism out of fear of being criminalized as 'terrorists'.

The arrests of peaceful protesters simply for displaying the message 'I Oppose Genocide. I Support Palestine Action' violates UK's international obligations to protect freedom of expression and peaceful assembly. Protesters have a right to peacefully express outrage at the ongoing genocide by Israel against Palestinians in Gaza. Under the international human rights framework to which the UK is a party, state interference with expression and peaceful assembly must be lawful, and a necessary and proportionate means of achieving a legitimate aim. Expression of support for a proscribed organisation could only meet this threshold, if that expression were likely to induce its audience to partake in violence, and to do so imminently. As part of this assessment, the particular facts of the expression, the proscription and the nature of the organisation in question must also be considered. In this instance, it cannot be justified to treat expression of support for Palestine Action as inherently and uniformly incitement. Caselaw by the European Court for Human Rights stated that placards are protected speech unless they directly and expressly constitute incitement.

The legal basis for the use of terrorism-related legislation to carry out the arrests and initiate prosecutions against peaceful protesters is questionable as the High Court has allowed Palestine Action to seek judicial review of their proscription, suggesting it may be unlawful. Given this, continuing arrests would be a reckless use of police power, and inevitably risk breaching the test of legality. There is no reasonable basis to consider participants at 'Defend our Juries' actions as inciting violence. Consequently, arresting them is both disproportionate and a clear violation of the UK's obligations under international human rights law. Furthermore, categorising such individuals as 'terrorists' is deeply inappropriate and absurd.
