FEARS GROW FOR WOMEN'S RIGHTS ACTIVIST

The husband and brother of detained women's rights activist Su Changlan have been released on bail. Su Changlan remains behind bars, and has now been detained for over four months without having access to a lawyer.

Chen Dequan, the husband of Su Changlan, was released on bail on 11 March, and her brother Su Shangwei on 16 March. They were detained on 14 February after going to the Foshan City Public Security Bureau, Guangdong province, to submit an application for permission to visit Su Changlan. While outside the bureau, Su Shangwei held a placard reading 'Su Changlan is innocent'.

Well-known women's rights activist Su Changlan was taken away from her home by police on 27 October 2014. She has been formally arrested for 'inciting subversion of state power', a charge which could lead to life imprisonment. It is believed the charges against her are as a result of posts she made online in support of the pro-democracy protests in Hong Kong. Su Changlan's lawyers have made several requests to visit her since her detention, but they have all been rejected.

Su Changlan's friend, Chen Qitang (also known as Tian Li), who had been providing legal assistance and petitioned for her release, was detained on 25 November and formally arrested on 31 December for 'inciting subversion of state power'. He has been detained in Nanhai District Detention Centre and has not had access to his lawyers.

Please write immediately in Chinese, English or your own language:

- Calling on the authorities to immediately and unconditionally release Su Changlan and Chen Qitang:
- Urging the authorities to ensure that pending their release, they all have regular, unrestricted access to their lawyers and families as well as any medical attention they may require, and are protected from torture and other ill-treatment.

ADDITIONAL INFORMATION

Su Changlan is a well-known activist in southern China, who has been detained several times previously due to her peaceful activities defending women's rights, on issues including family planning and domestic violence. The current charges against her are believed to be as a result of posts she made online in support of the prodemocracy protests in Hong Kong. She was questioned by police in Nanhai, Foshan, central Guangdong province, on two occasions in September in 2014, and according to friends the police warned her not to continue posting material about the protests. However, after making further comments about the protests on social media, she was taken away from her home by police on 27 October. It was not confirmed where she was being held until her family received a notice of the charges against her on 3 December, which stated that she is detained at Nanhai District Detention Centre.

Approximately 100 people were detained in mainland China after the pro-democracy protests in Hong Kong began in September 2014, for activities such as expressing their support on social media, shaving their heads in solidarity with the demonstrators, or planning to travel to Hong Kong to join the protests. At least twenty-seven remained in detention as of 19 March 2015. Among others, several poets and artists from Songzhuang, an artist community in Beijing, were detained for showing their support for the protests. This was part of a wider attempt by the Chinese authorities to silence any discussion or display of support for the events in Hong Kong. The popular photo-sharing platform Instagram was blocked, government censors attempted to remove all positive mentions of the pro-democracy protests online, while forcing newspapers and TV stations to only use the state-sponsored narrative of the protests.
