

PAKISTAN: WIDESPREAD HUMAN RIGHTS VIOLATIONS CONTINUE

AMNESTY INTERNATIONAL SUBMISSION FOR THE UN UNIVERSAL PERIODIC REVIEW, 28TH SESSION OF THE UPR WORKING GROUP, NOVEMBER 2017

Amnesty International is a global movement of more than 7 million people who campaign for a world where human rights are enjoyed by all.

Our vision is for every person to enjoy all the rights enshrined in the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and other international human rights standards.

We are independent of any government, political ideology, economic interest or religion and are funded mainly by our membership and public donations.

INTRODUCTION

This submission was prepared for the Universal Periodic Review (UPR) of Pakistan in November 2017. In it, Amnesty International evaluates the implementation of recommendations made in Pakistan's previous UPR noting that progress has been limited. It also assesses the human rights situation on the ground and makes recommendations to the government of Pakistan to address the human rights challenges mentioned in this report.

Amnesty International highlights continued harassment of human rights defenders, including enforced disappearance of defenders; arbitrary arrest and detention in Karachi and Balochistan; restrictions on the rights to freedom of expression and association; sectarian and religious violence; and violence against women and lack of access to justice.

Amnesty International also raises concerns about the continued application of the death penalty, including death sentences imposed by military courts; and forced return of refugees to Afghanistan.

FOLLOW UP TO THE PREVIOUS REVIEW

Since its UPR in 2012, Pakistan has made limited progress on some of the recommendations it had accepted. However, there has been progress on the development of legislation against domestic violence, honour crimes, child marriages and child labour.¹ The upper house of the Parliament, the Senate, has provided a forum for debate on human rights issues.

In the previous review, the government had committed to take “effective measures against enforced disappearances”,² “to combat impunity of all those who attack human rights defenders”,³ and “to introduce strong legislation to prohibit attacks on journalists”.⁴ On these issues, regrettably, there is little progress to report.

There were a number of recommendations from the 2012 review, which the government said it had already implemented or was in the process of implementing. Amnesty International is concerned however, about the extent and quality of implementation with regard to reform of the judiciary, law enforcement and the penitentiary system;⁵ strengthening of national human rights institutions;⁶ and legislative and other measures to address the situation of religious minorities.⁷ In January 2015, Pakistan established military courts to try civilians suspected of terrorism-related offences.⁸ The military courts were supposed to be a stop-gap arrangement while the civilian courts were strengthened; however, two months after their original mandate of two years lapsed, Parliament decided to reinstate the military courts.⁹

PROMOTION AND PROTECTION OF HUMAN RIGHTS ON THE GROUND

HUMAN RIGHTS DEFENDERS AND ENFORCED DISAPPEARANCES

Previously confined to the Federal Administered Tribal Areas (FATA), Khyber Pakhtunkhwa and Balochistan, in recent years the phenomenon of enforced disappearances has spread to other parts of the country. In August 2015, journalist Zeenat Shahzadi was abducted in Lahore on her way to work.¹⁰ She is believed to be the first woman to have been subjected to an enforced disappearance in Pakistan.¹¹ Before she was abducted, she had been reporting on the case of Hamid Ansari, an Indian national who had gone missing in 2012.¹² Zeenat Shahzadi is still missing.

In early January 2017, five human rights defenders were abducted from the capital Islamabad and parts of the Punjab province. Four of the five defenders - academic and poet, Salman Haider, and bloggers Asim Saeed, Ahmed Raza Naseer and Waqass Goraya – returned home between 27 and 29 January 2017. At the time of writing, the fifth defender, Samar Abbas, is still missing.¹³ Although the authorities have denied any involvement in these cases, Waqass Goraya, who now lives in the Netherlands, has said that a "government institution with links to the military held him and tortured him".¹⁴ All five defenders had used the Internet to express their views on human rights, criticising religious militancy and Pakistan's military establishment. The government has yet to investigate the cases and to hold the suspected perpetrators to account.

Sections of local media have incited violence against human rights defenders, accusing them of "anti-state" activities and "blasphemy".¹⁵ One programme in particular, "Aisay Nahi Chalay Ga", aired on Bol television, accused the human rights defenders who had gone missing in January 2017, as well as other activists and journalists, of blasphemy.¹⁶

Amnesty International welcomes the proposed Right to Information Bill, adopted by a Senate Select Committee in February 2017,¹⁷ which obligates all state institutions to provide information about missing persons within three days of a request for information being filed.

THE DEATH PENALTY

More than 400 people have been executed in Pakistan since the official moratorium on executions was lifted in 2014 following an armed attack on a school in Peshawar. At least 320 people were executed in 2015 alone, making it the highest number ever recorded for Pakistan in any given year.¹⁸

In January 2015, Parliament authorized the establishment of military courts for two years to try civilians accused of "terrorism motivated by religion or sectarianism".¹⁹ These military courts imposed the death penalty on 161 individuals following trials held in secret, in violation of international standards for a fair trial.²⁰ Among other concerns, the military courts were run by military officers subordinate to the military chain of command - and who had no formal legal training - in breach of the UN Basic Principles on the Independence of the Judiciary.²¹ The charges against the defendants were not made public and those convicted did not have the right to appeal in civilian courts. On 22 March 2017, Parliament approved a new constitutional amendment bill to extend the tenure of the military courts for another two years.²² Amnesty International has urged Pakistan's lawmakers to reverse the decision to reinstate the military courts.²³

Civilian courts have used the death penalty in contravention of international law, including by imposing the death penalty on those with mental disabilities, or those who were below 18 years of age when the crime was committed.²⁴

BLASPHEMY LAWS

The blasphemy laws, in particular the Pakistan Penal Code's Sections 295-A (outraging religious feelings), 295-B (desecrating the Quran), and 295-C (defiling the name of the Prophet Muhammad), are frequently abused by individuals and sectarian groups to settle personal scores, or to target religious minorities.²⁵ Defendants accused of blasphemy are forced to endure the ordeal of a trial and the specific factors associated with blasphemy trials may foster a climate of abuse of the process. These factors include the vaguely formulated laws, low standards of evidence required for conviction, and the manner in which allegations may be uncritically accepted by the police, the prosecuting authorities and the judges.²⁶

Section 295-C carries a mandatory death penalty.²⁷ Although no executions have been carried out under this provision, several individuals are on death row after having been sentenced under Section 295-C, with pending appeals to superior courts.²⁸

Amnesty International has documented a number of abuses that occur through the various stages of blasphemy proceedings, from case registration to police investigation to trials and appeals.²⁹

²⁵ The Supreme Court of Pakistan echoed this concern in a 2015 judgement where it stated: "The majority of blasphemy cases are based on false accusations stemming from property issues or other personal or family vendettas rather than genuine instances of blasphemy and they inevitably lead to mob violence against the entire community". Malik Muhammad Mumtaz Qadri v. the State, Criminal Appeals No. 210 and 211 of 2015, at page 26.

²⁷ Amnesty International believes that Section 295-C of the Pakistan Penal Code violates the right to life, as stated in Article 6 of the ICCPR. Section 295-C is not compatible with the stipulation in Article 6(2) that "in countries which have not abolished the death penalty, sentence of death may be imposed only for the most serious crimes." The offence of blasphemy falls out of this narrow category. Amnesty International, "As Good as Dead": The Impact of Blasphemy Laws in Pakistan (Index: ASA 33/5136/2016). p. 57.

²⁸ According to Human Rights Watch, at least 19 people convicted under the Blasphemy laws are currently under the death row. See Human Rights Watch, World Report 2017. 470. Available: <https://www.hrw.org/world-report/2017>

Religious clerics and their supporters, especially in the Punjab province, file complaints under Section 295-C or other relevant provisions of the Penal Code, on the basis of false or flimsy allegations. Despite weak evidence, police officers, prosecutors and trial courts tend to be reluctant to throw out such cases because of public pressure from religious groups, such as Tehrik-e-Tahafuz-e-Khatm-e-Nabuwat.³⁰ Mob violence and vigilante justice are common in blasphemy cases. Ahmadis and Christians have been attacked and killed following a mere allegation of blasphemy.³¹ On 13 April 2017, Mashal Khan, a journalism student of Mardan University, was stripped naked, beaten, and killed by a lynch mob in his hostel for alleged blasphemy online.³²

In April and May 2017, in four separate incidents, blasphemy accusations have been used to intimidate, threaten, and kill people. On 19 April 2017, three women entered the home of a faith healer in Sialkot, a city in the Punjab province, and shot him dead – allegedly because he had been accused of blasphemy in 2004.¹¹⁰ On 21 April 2017, a mob in Chitral attacked a man who was accused of blasphemy, and injured six police officers who intervened to protect him.¹¹¹ On 4 May, a 10 year old boy was killed and five other people injured when a mob tried to attack a Hindu man charged with blasphemy in Balochistan.¹¹²

ARBITRARY ARREST AND DETENTION

Human rights groups have documented cases of arbitrary arrest and detention, torture and other ill-treatment by paramilitary forces, the Rangers and the Frontier Constabulary, in Karachi and Balochistan, respectively.³³

In May 2016, Aftab Ahmed, a political worker belonging to the Muttahida Qaumi Movement (MQM), died following torture in the custody of the Rangers.³⁴ The then Army Chief, Raheel Sharif, ordered an internal inquiry after photographs of Aftab's body carrying marks of torture appeared in the media. Five Rangers personnel were subsequently suspended,³⁵ however, the authorities have yet to reveal the findings of the investigation.

Zafar Arif, a 70-year-old professor belonging to the MQM (London) was arrested in Karachi in October 2016 and charged under the Maintenance of Public Order in October 2016. Dr Arif, who

Its leaders and members frequently act as private complainants in blasphemy cases.

suffers from a heart condition, remained in prison until April 2017 without access to necessary medical treatment.³⁶

Dr Asim Hussain, a senior member of the Pakistan People's Party, was arrested by the Rangers in August 2016 on charges of corruption and treating "terrorists" at his hospital in Karachi. Dr. Hussain, who was facing trial before an anti-terrorism court before he received bail in March 2017, claimed that he was subjected to ill-treatment while in the custody of the Rangers.³⁷

Allegations of arbitrary arrests and detention have also been made in connection with counter-terrorism operations in Khyber Pakhtunkhwa and FATA.³⁸ Prolonged pre-trial detention under counter-terrorism legislation remains a serious concern. The Protection of Pakistan Act, 2004 allows for preventive detention for up to 90 days and grants law enforcement officials powers to carry out searches without a warrant and to arrest people without judicial approval for a range of offences. These extensive powers are potentially incompatible with Article 9 of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights (ICCPR).³⁹

Counter-terrorism operations are not subject to parliamentary oversight.⁴⁰ This results in a lack of accountability of security agencies regarding violations of the rights to life, to freedom from torture, and to liberty and security of person.

Domestic law does not provide for an independent mechanism to monitor the conditions of prisons, making it difficult to assess compliance with the ICCPR and the UN Standard Minimum Rules for the Treatment of Prisoners (the Nelson Mandela Rules). With those awaiting trial mixed with convicted prisoners, many of the country's jails are overcrowded.⁴¹ Many inmates enter the prison system with pre-existing mental conditions, which get worse during confinement. A 2001 Mental Disorders Ordinance stipulating a system for the inspection of mentally-ill prisoners has yet to be implemented.⁴²

The notion of "arbitrariness" is not to be equated with "against the law", but must be interpreted more broadly to include elements of inappropriateness, injustice, lack of predictability and due process of law, as well as elements of reasonableness, necessity and proportionality." RESTRICTIONS ON FREEDOM OF EXPRESSION AND ASSOCIATION

Journalists and media workers have been targeted and killed by non-state actors. Families of journalists have recently been targeted in Balochistan.⁴³ The government has not followed through on the Prime Minister's pledge to "establish an office of public prosecutor at the federal and provincial levels tasked with investigating attacks against journalists".⁴⁴ The Pakistan Electronic Crimes Act, 2016, curtails the exercise online of the rights to freedom of expression, and privacy by vesting Pakistan Telecommunications Authority with powers to retain data and shut down any website deemed to be propagating "anti-State" or "anti-Islam" views.⁴⁵

A new policy for regulation of international NGOs, announced in October 2015, grants powers to the Ministry of Interior to review the registration of NGOs based on their funding sources and the nature of their programmes.⁴⁶ All international NGOs were directed to re-apply for registration; however, many are still awaiting the outcome of their applications.⁴⁷ In December 2016, the Punjab government - on instructions from the Federal Interior Ministry - ordered South Asia Partnership Pakistan to shut down for allegedly submitting a "critical shadow report" to the UN Human Rights Council.⁴⁸

Other NGOs, mostly those engaged in human rights advocacy, complain of frequent visits by intelligence officials to their offices seeking information on staff and organisational activities.

SECTARIAN AND RELIGIOUS VIOLENCE

Following a brutal attack by Taliban gunmen on Peshawar's Army Public School in December 2014, the government launched a major military offensive against alleged terrorist hideouts in the northwest region. After a brief respite, suicide attacks have escalated, targeting the police, military, lawyers, and others, especially Shias.

The Hazara Shia community in Quetta also continues to be targeted.⁴⁹ Concentrated in two neighbourhoods of the city, Hazaras say they increasingly feel ghettoized. Many have fled to seek asylum in Australia and Europe, often making dangerous journeys by boat.⁵⁰

Pakistan's 2014 National Action Plan against terrorism had proposed a crackdown on hate speech. Despite this, sectarian leaders continue to incite violence against minorities, particularly Shias and Ahmadis.

VIOLENCE AGAINST WOMEN

Amid protests by religious groups, provincial legislators voted in February 2016 to enact a law to combat violence against women. The Punjab Protection of Women against Violence Act, 2016 criminalises “domestic violence, sexual violence, psychological abuse, economic abuse, stalking or cybercrime”⁵¹ and obligates the government to set up “Protection Centres” for survivors of such violence and District Women’s Protection Committees. The Punjab government has opened a pilot “Violence against Women Centre” in Multan to provide medical examination, complaint registration, and rehabilitation services to survivors of violence.⁵² It remains to be seen how effective it is and whether such centres are replicated elsewhere in the province.

A law passed by the provincial assembly of Sindh in November 2016 to prevent forced conversion of non-Muslim women to Islam has stalled after the Council of Islamic Ideology termed it “un-Islamic”.⁵³

Despite some progressive legislative initiatives, access to justice remains difficult for women. Gender norms in parts of the country often lead to women suffering abuse and exploitation in silence. Police officers and lawyers often encourage survivors of violence to reach “out-of-court” settlements instead of pursuing legal remedies. Female officers make up less than 1% of the country’s police force, which partly accounts for the reluctance of women to file complaints in the first place.⁵⁴

AFGHAN REFUGEES

In 2016, over 380,000 registered Afghan refugees were repatriated from Pakistan to Afghanistan with UNHCR assistance.⁵⁵ Exit interviews conducted by UNHCR cast doubts as to whether the repatriation was entirely voluntary.⁵⁶ They lend credence to accusations that the UN agency has become complicit in forced return of Afghan refugees.⁵⁷ Of those repatriated, 24% cited fear of arrest and/or deportation as the reason why they had “decided” to leave. Another 20% and 18%, respectively, said they were leaving because of uncertainty surrounding the “proof of registration” (the identity document issued by the Government of Pakistan), and “camp closure”.⁵⁸ The refugees are being repatriated to Afghanistan, which continues to experience conflict and instability, possibly in violation of the prohibition of non-refoulement.⁵⁹ Those left behind face an uncertain future and harassment by the authorities.⁶⁰

According to UNHCR and the IOM (International Organisation for Migration), a total of 606, 905 refugees, including undocumented refugees, were repatriated to Afghanistan in 2016. See, Asad Hashim, “Afghan refugees return home amid Pakistan crackdown”, Aljazeera online, 26 February 2017. ⁵⁶ The exit interviews were conducted by UNHCR between June 2013 and November 2016. For repatriation to be lawful, it must be truly voluntary, meaning refugees were able to make a free and informed decision to return. Coercing refugees to return to a country where they would be at risk of serious human rights violations violates the principle of non-refoulement. Amnesty International opposes any forcible returns to Afghanistan as due to ongoing armed conflict in many parts of Afghanistan, Amnesty International considers there is no way to ensure that returns to Afghanistan can be safe for individuals.

RECOMMENDATION FOR ACTION BY THE STATE UNDER REVIEW

AMNESTY INTERNATIONAL CALLS ON THE GOVERNMENT OF PAKISTAN TO:

INTERNATIONAL HUMAN RIGHTS LAW AND DOMESTIC LEGISLATION

- Ratify the International Convention for the Protection of All Persons from Enforced Disappearance;
- Ratify the 1951 UN Convention Relating to the Status of Refugees and the 1966 Protocol;
- Effectively implement the UN Standard Minimum Rules for the Treatment of Prisoners (the Nelson Mandela Rules), including by amending the Prison Rules and Prison Manuals in all provinces;
- Issue a standing invitation to the UN Special Rapporteurs to visit the country.

⁵⁹ As embodied in Article 33 of the 1951 Refugee Convention, the principle of ‘non-refoulement’ prohibits State parties from obliging a person to return to a territory where where his life or freedom would be threatened on account of his race, religion, nationality, membership of a particular social group or political opinion”. Although Pakistan is not a signatory to the 1951 Refugee Convention, non-refoulement is also believed to be a norm of customary international law making it binding on all states. See, for example, UN High Commissioner for Refugees (UNHCR), “The Principle of Non-Refoulement as a Norm of Customary International Law: Response to the Questions Posed to UNHCR by the Federal Constitutional Court of the Federal Republic of Germany in Cases 2 BvR 1938/93, 2 BvR 1953/93, 2 BvR 1954/93”, 31 January 1994, Available: <http://www.refworld.org/docid/437b6db64.html>

⁶⁰ There are currently an estimated 1.3 million registered and another million undocumented Afghan refugees in Pakistan. Starting with the Taliban attack on Peshawar’s Army Public Schools in December 2014, authorities have linked elements within Afghanistan as well as Afghan refugees living in Pakistan to terrorist incidents in Pakistan. Pakistan’s law enforcement agencies have cracked down on undocumented refugees in particular amid allegations of arbitrary detention and extortion. In November 2016, the government had set March 31 as the deadline for Afghan refugees to leave Pakistan. The deadline has now been extended until the end of 2017. See, Human Rights Watch, “Pakistan Coercion, UN Complicity: The Mass Forced Return of Afghan Refugees”, 13 February 2017.

HUMAN RIGHTS DEFENDERS

- Constitute an independent inquiry into all suspected cases of enforced disappearance of human rights defenders and hold those suspected to be responsible to account in fair trials;
- Urgently ensure the safety and security of all human rights defenders and activists, journalists and their families in light of threats following allegations of blasphemy and “anti-state” activities;
- Enact the Right to Information Bill, approved by the Senate Select Committee, to ensure disclosure of information on every individual picked up by the security agencies.

THE DEATH PENALTY

- Abolish the death penalty for all crimes;
- Pending abolition of the death penalty, reinstate a moratorium on executions, and introduce a statutory prohibition on imposing the death penalty on the mentally disabled and those who were juveniles at the time of the crime.

BLASPHEMY LAWS

- Repeal Sections 295-A, 295-B and 295-C of the Pakistan Penal Code;
- Pending the repeal, commute all death sentences imposed under Section 295-C of the Penal Code;
- Ensure adequate protection of judges, defence counsels, and defence witnesses involved in all blasphemy cases;
- Remove Sections 295-A and 298-A from the list of scheduled offences under the Anti-Terrorism Act, 1997.

ARREST AND DETENTION

- Review counter-terrorism laws to remove overboard powers to arrest without a judicial remand and prolonged pre-trial detention provided under Section 5 of the Anti-Terrorism Act, 1997, and Sections 3 and 6 of the Protection of Pakistan Act, 2004;
- Thoroughly and impartially investigate all allegations of torture, arbitrary detention, and killings by paramilitary forces in Karachi and Balochistan;
- Ensure, promote and facilitate the effective implementation of the Mental Disorders Ordinance, 2001 with a view to improving the care and treatment of mentally ill prisoners.

RESTRICTIONS ON FREEDOM OF EXPRESSION AND ASSOCIATION

- Set up an office of public prosecutor at the federal and provincial levels for investigating and prosecuting attacks against journalists in line with the Prime Minister’s commitment;
- Amend the Prevention of Electronic Crimes Act, 2016, in particular Sections 31, 3, and 37, to remove overboard powers for monitoring and shutting down websites and retaining data;
- Direct the Ministry of Interior, provincial and district administrations to stop the intimidation and harassment of NGOs, and expedite the process of NGO registration.

AFGHAN REFUGEES

- Halt all returns and repatriation to Afghanistan that do not meet the definition of “voluntary”, and ensure that Afghan refugees fearing return to Afghanistan can continue to seek and enjoy refuge in Pakistan;
- Direct law enforcement agencies to cease the harassment and intimidation of all registered and un-registered refugees residing in Pakistan and hold anyone found responsible for such acts to account;

- Ratify the 1951 Convention relating to the Status of Refugees and its 1967 Optional Protocol and refrain from adopting policies that result in refugees being denied international protection.

SECTARIAN AND RELIGIOUS VIOLENCE

- Reverse the decision to reinstate military courts as their proceedings do not in general meet international fair trial standards;
- Thoroughly and impartially investigate and prosecute all instances of incitement to violence against religious minorities.

VIOLENCE AGAINST WOMEN

- Facilitate the passage of the proposed law against forced conversion of non-Muslim women to Islam, as approved by the provincial assembly of Sindh;
- Set up Protection Centres for survivors of violence and District Women's Protection Committees as stipulated under the Punjab Protection of Women against Violence Act, 2016;
- Draw up a policy on increasing the number of women in the police force and the judiciary, and build the capacity of police and judiciary to work on cases of violence against women in a gender-sensitive manner.
