SUDAN A new clampdown on political opponents

April 1997 AI INDEX: AFR 54/13/97

DISTR: SC/CO/GR

Arrests in Port Sudan and Khartoum in late March and early April 1997 underline that the large scale round-up of suspected political opponents begun by the Sudanese authorites on 13 January 1997 continues. Amnesty International has identified over 260 men and women arrested in towns and cities in northern Sudan (see attached list). Most still remain in detention without charge or trial. Some have been denied access to their families and necessary medical treatment. There are reports of torture.

The arrests follow intensified military action in eastern Sudan by armed forces belonging to the National Democratic Alliance (NDA), an umbrella organization of banned political parties, trade unions and armed opposition groups in exile. On 12 January 1997 troops from the Sudan People's Liberation Army (SPLA) and Sudan Alliance Forces (SAF) captured army garrisons north and south of the Blue Nile and the towns of Kurmuk and Geissan close to the Ethiopian border. They then pushed towards the site of an electricity-generating station which supplies Khartoum, Sudan's capital, with much of its power. The Sudanese authorites have accused Ethiopia of invading Sudan, which Ethiopia denies. In March the NDA mounted further attacks on targets close to the border with Eritrea.

The NDA has said that it is aiming to weaken the government to pave the way for a popular uprising in Khartoum. On 21 January Sadiq al-Mahdi, Sudan's Prime Minister ousted in the 1989 coup that brought the current government to power, called on the armed forces to rise against the government. Sadiq al-Mahdi left Sudan clandestinely in late 1996.

Although many of those detained are suspected of being supporters of the NDA, the government has not charged them or produced evidence to suggest that they were involved in violent or treasonable activity. On 29 January Hassan al-Turabi, Speaker of the National Assembly and the ideological mentor of the government, told journalists that the authorities had arrested "10 to 15" men from the Umma Party and Democratic Unionist Party (DUP) in order to prevent disorder. He went on to say that "once we restore our territory, probably they will be released". On the same day President Omar Hassan Ahmad al-Bashir described the arrests as a precautionary measure "that will end when the foreign threat is removed". He indicated that the detainees would not be charged and brought to trial. Amnesty International is concerned that the detainees are facing indefinite detention without charge or trial.

Senior opposition politicians were among the first arrested; many are men who have been detained on several previous occasions. Several members of the banned Umma Party, which is led by Sadiq al-Mahdi, were arrested at their homes before dawn on 13 January. Senior adherents of the Ansar, one of Sudan's main Islamic orders (closely connected to the Umma Party), were taken to jail over the next few days; eight others were arrested on 17 February. Detained members of the banned DUP, Sudan's other major political party, include Sid Ahmad al-Hussein, the party's Secretary General and former Deputy Prime Minister. Communists, Ba'athists and members of banned southern Sudanese political parties were also among those arrested.

Scores of trade unionists, students, lawyers, businessmen and others are also detained. They include the leaders of the banned Sudan Workers' Trade Union Federation and many other senior trade unionists. At least 11 doctors have been arrested; the Medical Association was one of many trade unions which played a key role in ousting the government of Ga'afar Nimeiri in a popular uprising in April 1985. Student leaders from Khartoum, al-Ahlia, al-Nilein and Northern Region Universities are also in detention.

Most detainees are reported to be held in a security service-run section of Kober Prison, the country's main jail located in Khartoum North. Conditions are reported to be harsh and crowded. Some had been held incommunicado in security offices and secret detention centres before transfer to Kober. For example, Mohamed Ibrahim Abdu (also known as "Kabaj"), was denied access to his family while being held at an unknown location after his arrest on 10 February. He is a diabetic and only received necessary insulin after his family were finally able to see him in Kober in early March. Other detainees who are reported to be receiving inadequate medical care include the prominent lawyer Ali Mahmud Hassanein and the veteran trade unionist Ali al-Mahi al-Sakhi.

Reports of torture include the beating by security officers of a recently graduated student who was held for several hours on 16 March and forced to strip naked. This treatment was described as "a graduation present". He was told that every time the opposition attacked in the east he would be re-arrested and beaten again.

On 13 January, the day the round-up started, Dr Gáspár Bíró, the United Nations Special Rapporteur on the situation of human rights in Sudan, arrived in Khartoum at the start of a scheduled visit. On 14 January the authorites told him that they "were not able to guarantee his safety" because of the "anger of the Sudanese masses" at the military threat in the east. The Special Rapporteur left Sudan after one day. Amnesty International believes that the government's action amounted to expelling the Special Rapporteur at a time when it was engaged in arresting political opponents.

Amnesty International is calling on the Sudan Government to release prisoners detained unless they are to be charged with a recognisably criminal offence and brought promptly to a fair trial. The organization is also calling for detainees to be allowed access to lawyers, their families and all necessary medical treatment. Reports of torture should be investigated and those responsible brought to justice.
