Pascal Gakyaro and Dan Mugarura have been charged with treason and are currently being held on remand at Kigo Prison, near the capital Kampala. They both have access to family and lawyers. Pascal Gakyaro was charged on 20 January and Dan Mugarura on 21 January, allegedly after being handed over to the police by intelligence officers. According to media reports, the charges against the men relate to alleged links between members of the Reform Agenda (RA) opposition group and the rebel People's Redemption Army (PRA).

Two other RA supporters, Francis Ogwang Olebe and Charles Ekemu, were charged with treason on 21 January, reportedly for the same reason. Exact details of the charges against the four men are not known, but Amnesty International fears they may be politically motivated.

Three other men also linked to the RA group, Dan Tumusime, Peter Eriaku and Ismail Nyonga, were arrested in early January. They are being held incommunicado at an unknown location and are at risk of torture or ill treatment. Like Pascal Gakyaro and Dan Mugarura, all three men were arrested without a warrant, by armed security personnel in plain clothes. Dan Tumusime was arrested on 7 January in Kampala. Peter Eriaku was arrested on 9 January in Soroti Town, northeast of Kampala. Ismail Nyonga was arrested on 11 January at the petrol station in Kampala, owned by Dan Mugarura, where he works. It is not known where they were taken.

Dan Tumusime and Peter Eriaku are supporters of the RA. Dan Tumusime, a fine arts graduate, was reportedly an active member of the RA during the 2001 presidential elections, and also founded Uganda Art for Peace, a non-profit-making organization promoting peace education through art. Peter Eriaku reportedly supported opposition presidential candidate Aggrey Awori during the 2001 elections, and has unsuccessfully contested a seat in parliament. Ismail Nyonga is an employee of Dan Mugarura, but it is not known if he supports the RA.

At least eight men with links to the RA have now been arrested, with many more alleged to be in custody.
