UA Fear for safety/Death threats
GUATEMALA Norma Cruz (f), Director of Fundación Sobrevivientes (Survivors' Foundation)
Her relatives and other members of staff

On 19 October at around 12pm a relative of Norma Cruz (whose name is withheld for safety reasons) was stopped by an unknown man driving a pick-up truck while walking home in Guatemala city. Norma Cruz's relative offered the man a cellular phone thinking it was a robbery but was told by the man that it was not and to "get in son of a bitch, get in or you're going to die" (subite hijo/a de la gran puta, subite sino te vas a morir). The relative did as told and got in the back where there were two masked men, one of them holding a gun at the relative. They drove the relative around repeating "you're going to die". The relative was released after 20 minutes one block away from Norma Cruz's home. Norma Cruz is an active women's human rights defender.

During the morning of 23 October the same relative received three phone calls. In the first one, a male voice said "are you comfortable, you piece of shit, you're going to die" (vás cómodo, verdad cerote? Te vas a morir) after which the call was cut off. The following two calls were cut off when the relative answered. Later that day a green pick-up truck with tinted windows was parked in front of the offices of Norma Cruz's organization, the Sobrevivientes Foundation. Members of staff deemed this suspicious and approached the vehicle in order to talk to the driver, who immediately drove off.

The safety of Norma Cruz, and that of her colleagues and relatives, is at risk.

BACKGROUND INFORMATION

Sobrevivientes Foundation provides psychological support to women victims of sexual violence and other forms of domestic violence. It also provides legal assistance in cases of killings of women and has investigated high-profile cases of trafficking of people in which government officials could be involved. Sobrevivientes Foundations believes these acts of intimidation are related to a particular case they are currently supporting.
