UA 266/94      Death penalty: Fear for prisoners on death row      15 July 1994

TRINIDAD AND TOBAGO      About 60 prisoners under sentence of death

Following the execution of Glen Ashby on 14 July - the first in nearly 15 years - Amnesty International is gravely concerned that more prisoners may be executed in Trinidad and Tobago regardless of the state of their appeals.

On 12 July Glen Ashby was issued a warrant of execution to be carried out on 14 July. He had been sentenced to death in July 1989 and his appeal dismissed in December 1993. Last week the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council (JCPC) in London, Trinidad and Tobago's final court of appeal, dismissed his petition for leave to appeal against his conviction. He immediately submitted his case to the UN Human Rights Committee, where it was pending a decision.

Ashby had been under sentence of death for four years and 11 months, just short of the five year period when his sentence should have been commuted under a decision by the JCPC in November 1993, which ruled that executing anyone over five years after sentence would constitute inhuman or degrading punishment or treatment. Furthermore, a decision pending in the case of two other prisoners - Lincoln Guerra and Brian Wallen - also had a bearing on Ashby's case.

Hours before the execution the Attorney General, Keith Sobion, had given an undertaking that the execution would not go ahead until all possibility of obtaining a stay of execution had been exhausted. The process was still in progress when the execution was carried out.

Amnesty International is deeply concerned that if, in a case when so many avenues of appeal were pending, the authorities were prepared to flagrantly violate national law and international standards to hang a man, then all prisoners under sentence of death are in danger of being executed at short notice in Trinidad and Tobago.

BACKGROUND INFORMATION

Prior to 14 July, the last execution in Trinidad and Tobago was carried out in November 1979. Several attempts to resume executions had been made in the last few years, most recently on 24 March 1994. In all cases it was clear that the executions could only be carried out if the authorities were prepared to ignore legal obligations at national and international level. Many of these attempts coincided with increases in the rate of violent crime or particular incidents. The breach of national and international law and the disregard for pending, relevant appeals, clearly indicates that authorities were determined to execute, regardless of judicial rules and procedures, in order to please the strongly pro-death penalty public and make political gains.

There are currently around 60 prisoners on death row in Trinidad and Tobago.

RECOMMENDED ACTION: Please send telegrams, faxes and airmail letters either in English or in your own language, or call by telephone:

- condemning the execution of Glen Ashby carried out on 14 July despite appeals pending at national and international level; and stating that this is a flagrant violation of Trinidad and Tobago's national law and international standards;
- urging that an investigation be carried out into the execution of Glen Ashby, and that appropriate action be taken against those responsible for ordering the execution;

- urging that no further executions be carried out in Trinidad and Tobago.
