Amnesty International delegation visits Sri Lanka

As part of Amnesty International's continuing research into the human rights situation in Sri Lanka, a delegation from the human rights organisation is visiting the country between 3 and 23 August 1997.

The delegates are: Ingrid Massagé, Amnesty International Researcher, International Secretariat; David Petrsek, legal advisor; and Ian Martin, former Secretary General of Amnesty International.

The delegation will visit the Jaffna peninsula in the north of the country, which has been the scene of much conflict and grave human rights violations.

During the visit the delegates will have discussions with government officials and others on a range of issues including constitutional reform, redress for past human rights violations and recommendations for future protection of human rights.
