Shaikh 'Abd al-Amir Mansur al-Jamri has in recent weeks reportedly been subjected to various forms of ill-treatment: solitary confinement, threats of rape against his wife and arrest of his children as well as threats to kill him. His health is believed to have deteriorated, and there are fears that he may be at risk of further ill-treatment.

This ill-treatment is apparently intended to force him to sign a statement accepting full responsibility for all events connected with anti-government protests in Bahrain since December 1994 so that he can be brought to trial. He is said to have been taken to an investigating judge in order to sign the statement but refused to do so.

Shaikh 'Abd al-Amir Mansur al-Jamri and the other seven above-named are prominent Muslim Shi'a leaders and religious figures detained without charge or trial since their arrests on 22 January 1996. Although they were originally held incommunicado it is now thought they are allowed visits from their families. Their arrests came at a time of mass arrests carried out by security forces in response to public demonstrations angry at the closure of mosques. Details regarding others detained are not available. Amnesty International considers the above-named to be prisoners of conscience.

The eight leaders were also detained during periods of unrest in 1994-1995 and held without charge or trial until their release in September 1995.
