BURMESE NOBEL PRIZE-WINNER: A PRISONER ON HER BIRTHDAY

While Myanmar's pro-democracy leader spends her 48th birthday a prisoner in her own home, representatives of the military junta (the State Law and Order Restoration Council (SLORC)) who imprisoned her attend the United Nations World Conference on Human Rights in Vienna as delegates from Myanmar.

Tomorrow (Saturday, 19 June) is the birthday of the detained Myanmar political leader and 1991 Nobel Peace Prize-winner, Aung San Suu Kyi. Amnesty International is organising an international day of action in towns and cities throughout the world to remind people of her continued detention without charge or trial.

Aung San Suu Kyi has been held by Myanmar's military government for almost four years. In 1990, Aung San Suu Kyi's party, the National League for Democracy (NLD), won more than 80 per cent of the parliamentary seats in the country's elections. The SLORC refuses to hand over power to the NLD and continues to imprison many of its leaders.

Myanmar, under the SLORC, has been among those countries in Asia arguing most strongly against an international idea of human rights - stressing instead regional, cultural and economic differences, and opposing "interference" in "internal affairs."

Amnesty International completely rejects this argument. Such differences can never be used to justify human rights violations. Amnesty International's Secretary General, Pierre Sané has said, "Nowhere has it been demonstrated that in order to develop you need to torture. Governments cannot ask people to choose between bread and liberty. I am deeply concerned that this kind of stance may actually undermine the fundamental human rights which the World Conference ought to be upholding and strengthening."

Amnesty International has identified about 1,500 opponents of the military government who are still being held in Myanmar. Some, like Aung San Suu Kyi, are known to be prisoners of conscience detained without trial, others were sentenced after unfair trials. Security forces continue to commit gross human rights violations, including arbitrary detention, torture and extrajudicial executions with impunity.

Amnesty International has this week received a message for the chairman of the World Conference written on the back of a shirt smuggled out of one of Myanmar's many prisons. It was written and signed by four political prisoners. The shirt will be on display at the Amnesty International tent in Vienna. The text reads:

"The Honourable Chairman/President of the conference, World Conference on Human Rights, Vienna, Austria.

The Honourable Delegates,

We all political prisoners who languish in the prison cells of --- jail, pay respect to the World conference on Human Rights, which will promote developing in the area of Human Rights all over the world, and congratulates delegates who are attending the conference to give good-will services for human rights and democracy.

We also send this message on behalf of entire Burmese people, for there are no human rights in Burma under the repressive Junta.

The Burmese people, who are suffering from the severe violation of human rights by the military dictatorship for over 30 years, hope for the decisions and resolutions to have greater progress in human rights area, which will be drawn by this "World Conference", which is the milestone in the human history.

We realize that, the people of similar nations likewise, who live in the suffocated and unhealthy evil society under the lack of democracy and human rights, will be expecting likely.

We all believe that, undoubtedly, this 'World Conference' which is held coincidentally to fulfil the urgent needs of the world situation, will give solutions to the problems related to the human rights violations, which has being occurred in many countries including Burma.

We recognize and give thanks for ever to the efforts and good-will of the delegates, for re-affirming the universality of the human rights, which is the foundation of freedom, justice and peace in the world.

Above all, we, on behalf of the Burmese people deeply wish to gain the purposes of this 'World Conference'."

(The letter was signed and dated and the name of the prison mentioned. We have deleted these in the interests of the safety of the authors).

Note to editors: the day of action includes demonstrations - many with Aung San Suu Kyi masks and birthday cakes - outside Myanmar embassies in London, Vienna, Rome, Tel Aviv and Canberra. In Prague, the Czech President Václav Havel is expected to issue a statement calling for Aung San Suu Kyi's release. Amnesty International local and national groups around the world are sending birthday cards and faxes to the Myanmar government protesting at the political leader's continued detention. For details of local events, contact individual Amnesty International Section offices.

MALDIVES: POLITICAL PRISONERS, INCLUDING PRISONERS OF CONSCIENCE, STILL HELD AFTER THREE YEARS

Amnesty International today issued a report detailing the cases of over three dozen political prisoners, including prisoners of conscience, who have been detained since 1990 in the Republic of Maldives and called on the government to take action to safeguard human rights.

Some were arrested in March 1990 for distributing leaflets which alleged that there had been vote-rigging during parliamentary elections in November 1989. Others were arrested in November and December 1990 in connection with an alleged conspiracy to explode petrol bombs during the fifth summit of the South Asian Association of Regional Cooperation in the capital, Male', and for planning other acts of violence.

Several people involved in these cases were journalists and writers who had been critical of the government during a period of liberalization which followed the elections. Another group of prisoners whose cases have a political dimension were arrested for attacking the home of the Head of the Police in August 1991. Some of those arrested have now been released, but others remain imprisoned.

Not all the prisoners have been charged or tried and some have been held for long periods without trial. Others were sentenced to periods of imprisonment or banishment after trials which failed to meet international standards for fair trial. For example, at least 15 were charged under the Prevention of Terrorism Act, which was passed in December 1990 and applied retroactively. Some were ill-treated while under interrogation by the police.

The ill-treatment suffered by prisoners included being held in solitary confinement for long periods while under interrogation. Prisoners have also described being held in hinged hand-cuffs, which greatly restricted their movement and chafed their wrists, for up to six weeks during their solitary confinement. Some complain of lasting weakness as a result.

Amnesty International delegates visited the Republic of Maldives in November 1991 and October 1992 and talked with government officials about the organization's concerns. The organization's requests to observe the trial of one political prisoner and to visit Dhoonidhoo detention centre and Gamadhoo prison were refused.

Amnesty International is urging the government of the Maldives to implement a series of human rights safeguards to ensure that: people cannot be detained on grounds of conscience; trial procedures conform to internationally accepted standards of fairness; and prisoners are humanely treated. It is also calling for the immediate release of any existing prisoners of conscience, a review of the cases of all other political prisoners who are serving sentences, and for political prisoners detained without trial to be released or promptly charged and tried.
