TWELVE ACTIVISTS RELEASED, FOUR STILL DETAINED

Twelve of the political activists arrested around the Togolese presidential election have been released on bail: they were not ill-treated during the month they spent in custody. A least four are still detained in the northern prison of Kara.

The four people still detained, Fulbert Attisso, Guillaume Coco, Yaovi Abobi and Eric Solewassi, are all members of the Citizens' Movement for an Alternative (Mouvement Citoyen pour l'Alternance, MCA). They have been charged with "an attempt on the security of the state" (atteinte à la sûreté de l'État) and are held in the prison in Kara (420 km north of the capital, Lomé) which makes it much more difficult for their families and lawyers to visit them. Conditions at the prison are known to be harsh.

The other 12 political activists including Augustin Glokpon and Jacob Benissan, were released on bail on 31 March. They are members of the main opposition party, the Union of Forces for Change (Union des Forces de Changement, UFC). The two members of the opposition party Organization to Build Togo in Solidarity (Organisation pour bâtir dans l'Union un Togo solidaire, OBUTS), who were arrested after the election as they were distributing leaflets, Gérard Adja and Emmanuel Atayi, were also released, on 30 March and 1 April respectively, along with eight other people.

ADDITIONAL INFORMATION

The incumbent, Faure Gnassingbe, won Togo's presidential election on 4 March 2010. He had been appointed to the government in 2003 by his father, General Gnassingbé Eyadéma, who ruled the country for more than 40 years, until his death in 2005.

The 4 March election took place amid allegations of widespread fraud, condemned by opposition party leaders speaking to demonstrations, which were banned or dispersed with teargas.
