ARTIST ENDS HUNGER STRIKE BUT REMAINS IN PRISON

Imprisoned Cuban artist Danilo Maldonado Machado ended his hunger strike on 1 October after being told by a state official that he would be released in 15 days. He remains a prisoner of conscience and should be released immediately and unconditionally.

On 8 September Danilo Maldonado Machado, known by his artistic name 'El Sexto', initiated a hunger strike to protest his detention without trial in Cuba since December 2014. He is believed to be accused of "aggravated contempt" after he was arrested for transporting two pigs with the names "Raúl" and "Fidel" painted on them.

On 1 October, his mother was allowed to visit him at the Valle Grande prison, in the outskirts of Havana, the capital of Cuba. Danilo Maldonado Machado told her that he decided to stop his hunger strike after a state official, acting as a mediator, promised that he would be released unconditionally in 15 days if he ended his hunger strike.

In August, a similar pledge to be released by 24 August was allegedly made to Danilo Maldonado Machado, however he has remained in prison.

According to his relatives, Danilo Maldonado Machado is in good spirits and his health condition is stable. He was removed from isolation on 1 October, but continues to refuse to wear the prison's uniform.

Danilo Maldonado Machado told his mother to "not stop the campaign for his release," as he is worried the promise made by the official will not be upheld. His mother told Amnesty International: "I'm not afraid. I want my son free. The only thing that matters is his release."

Please write immediately in Spanish or your own language:

- Calling on the authorities to release Danilo Maldonado Machado immediately and unconditionally, as he is a prisoner of conscience, imprisoned solely for peacefully exercising his right to freedom of expression;
- Calling on them to repeal all legislation which unduly limits freedom of expression, assembly and association;
- Urging them to ensure that, pending his release, he is provided with any medical care which he may require; not tortured or otherwise ill-treated; and that he is granted regular access to family and lawyers of his choosing.

ADDITIONAL INFORMATION

Danilo Maldonado Machado is a Cuban graffiti artist who regularly collaborates with the artistic group Estado de SATS, an organization which seeks “to create a plural space of participation and debate, where civil liberties, practically annulled in Cuba, can be exercised, and to redesign everything based on our worries, and immediate future”. The group also campaigns for human rights through artistic experiences. They recently campaigned for the ratification by Cuba of the International Covenants on Civil and Political Rights, and on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, and are currently demanding an amnesty law for all those imprisoned on politically-motivated charges.

Local activists believe Danilo Maldonado Machado’s continuous detention without trial seeks to sanction him for his activism and send a message to other activists and dissidents. In recent months, his lawyer has requested a modification of the precautionary measures seeking the release of Danilo Maldonado Machado during the judicial proceeding, but it was denied by the prosecutor. A new demand was presented last week and is awaiting a new decision from the office of the public prosecutor.

Article 144 of the Cuban Penal Code defines the crime of contempt (desacato), making all forms of disrespect of state officials an offence and providing for longer prison terms where the disrespect is directed against government members or other top state officials.

Article 144 states: “1. Anyone who threatens, slanders, defames, insults, harms or in any way outrages or offends, orally or in writing, the dignity or honour of an authority, public official, or their agents or auxiliaries, in the exercise of their functions or on the occasion of or because of them will incur a penalty of between three months and one year’s loss of liberty or a fine... or both. 2. If the deed established in the previous paragraph is directed against the President of the Council of State, the President of the National Assembly of Popular Power, the members of the Council of State and the Council of Ministers or the deputies at the National Assembly of Popular Power, the penalty will be between one and three years’ loss of liberty.”

Danilo Maldonado Machado is believed to be accused of “aggravated contempt” as the outrage was understood to be directed against Raúl and Fidel Castro Ruz, President of the Council of State and of Ministers of the Republic, and Deputy at the National Assembly of Popular Power, respectively. This provision, which is often used to silence dissent and to shield public officials from legitimate criticism, constitutes an illegitimate restriction on freedom of expression. According to the Inter-American Commission on Human Rights (IACHR): “[a] law that targets speech that is considered critical of the public administration by virtue of the individual who is the object of the expression, strikes at the very essence and content of freedom of expression” and “may affect not only those directly silenced, but society as a whole”.

Amnesty International believes that public officials should tolerate more criticism than private individuals. The use of defamation laws with the purpose or effect of inhibiting legitimate criticism of government or public officials violates the right to freedom of expression. Amnesty International opposes laws prohibiting insult or disrespect of heads of state or public figures, the military or other public institutions or flags or symbols (such as lèse majesté and desacato laws). Amnesty International also opposes laws criminalizing defamation, whether of public figures or private individuals, which should be treated as a matter for civil litigation. Public officials should not receive state assistance or support in bringing civil actions for defamation.
