Fear forBOLIVIADr Waldo Albarracín, human rights defender
His family

An anonymous caller has threatened to kill the president of a leading human rights organization, Waldo Albarracín. Amnesty International believes he and his family are in grave danger.

Waldo Albarracín, who is a lawyer and university lecturer, is the president of the Bolivian Permanent Human Rights Assembly, Asamblea Permanente de Derechos Humanos de Bolivia (APDH). The threatening phone calls were made to his home number.

On 22 February 16-year-old Rodrigo Albarracín answered the telephone and was told that his father had been "sentenced to death".

The APDH reported the death threat to the Chamber of Deputies Human Rights Commission, The Human Rights Ombudsman's Office, the Minister of Justice and Human Rights and the Minister of Government, asking for a full investigation. The Ministry of Government replied that they had no further information about the matter.

When Waldo Albarracín's wife, Sonia Vallejos, answered the telephone on 28 February she was told that it was Waldo Albarracín's "second warning," and that the death threat applied to the whole family. When she answered a third call on 5 March she recognised the same voice, saying that Waldo Albarracín was getting a "third warning".

Amnesty International believes that these threats are connected with his human rights work.

BACKGROUND INFORMATION

In January 1997 Waldo Albarracín was abducted by members of the police in the capital, La Paz. They held him prisoner for several hours, keeping him blindfolded while they beat him and threatened to kill him. He was eventually left in the Police Headquarters. No formal charges have been brought against the officers involved.

Waldo Albarracín has been threatened repeatedly because of his human rights work. He and his family have been the subject of six Urgent Actions and follow-ups since January 1997, but the authorities have consistently failed to investigate the threats.

In August 2000 the APDH Legal Affairs Secretary (Secretario de Asuntos Jurídicos), Sacha Llorentti, received two death threats on his mobile phone, telling him that "his days were numbered" (see UA 238/00, AMR 18/10/00, 10 August 2000). In 1999, the president of the APDH in Santa Cruz, Aldalberto Rojas, also received phone threats, and their office was broken into and their computer destroyed.

For more details of the kidnaping and assault on Dr Waldo Albarracín, see the external document Bolivia: Undermining human rights work, AI Index AMR 18/10/97, May 1997.)
