UA 58/06 Fear of torture or ill-treatment/ incommunicado detention/ prisoners of conscience

TURKMENISTAN Dzhumadurdy OVEZOV (m), 54, journalist
Meretmuhammet KHOMMADOV (m), 54, journalist

Dzhumadurdy Ovezov and Meretmuhammet Khommadov, journalists from the Mary region of southeastern Turkmenistan, have been held incommunicado since their arrest on 7 March, and are at risk of torture or ill-treatment. Amnesty International believes that they are prisoners of conscience, detained solely for the peaceful exercise of their right to freedom of expression.

The two men work for the US-funded Radio Liberty, a radio network which frequently criticizes the Turkmen authorities in its broadcasts. It is not known where the men are being held, and neither their families nor their Radio Liberty colleagues have been able to obtain any information regarding the reasons for their arrest. The Prague office of Radio Liberty reported on 10 March that the Turkmen authorities have disconnected the telephones of the families and friends of Dzhumadurdy Ovezov and Meretmuhammet Khommadov, and also of its other staff in the country.

Radio Liberty journalists have been deliberately targeted by the authorities in the past for their reporting. For example, the mobile phone of Dzhumadurdy Ovezov was cut off on 5 November 2004, one day after Radio Liberty's Turkmen Service began broadcasting a series of interviews which he had conducted on his mobile phone, in which he criticized government policies on land reform and spoke out about human rights violations in Turkmenistan.

BACKGROUND INFORMATION

The Turkmen authorities' clampdown on media freedom has intensified since an alleged attempt on the life of Turkmenistan's President, Saparmurat Niyazov, in 2002. All domestic media is state-controlled and the authorities have taken a series of measures aimed at preventing access to alternative sources of information. The authorities routinely block websites that publicize "unauthorized" information and Amnesty International has previously received reports of officials visiting the homes of individuals whom they had identified as utilizing such sites.

In a move to further purge Turkmenistan of critical reporting and to prevent critical information from coming to the attention of the international community, the Turkmen authorities have increasingly targeted people affiliated with the US-funded Radio Liberty, which broadcasts across Europe, Central Asia, the Middle East and southwestern Asia. The Turkmen Service of Radio Liberty is one of the few remaining sources of alternative information available to people inside Turkmenistan.

Amnesty International has documented how the authorities have in the past used arbitrary detention, threats including death threats, beatings, and the targeting of family members to silence those affiliated or cooperating with Radio Liberty. In July 2004 Saparmurat Ovezberdiev, Radio Liberty's correspondent in the capital, Ashgabat, was forced into exile as a result of severe government pressure that included arbitrary arrest, beatings, and the threat of long imprisonment or death. The telephone lines of people critical of the Turkmen authorities, who have given interviews to Radio Liberty, have in many cases been disconnected in an apparent attempt to prevent them from passing on information about government policies and human rights violations.
